HONEY IN INFANT FEEDING

"Honey is the best carbohydrate for use in infant feeding, according to a report in the 'Journal of Pediatrics' for June, 1938. The report is based on extensive blood sugar studies made by Drs. F. W. Schultz, J. L. Gedgoud and I. Loewenstramm, and also by E. M. Knott, Ph.D., all of Chicago.

"The sugars studied were dextrose and levulose, sucrose (cane sugar) and lactose (milk sugar), and also corn syrup and honey. With the exception of dextrose, state the investigators, honey, which is composed of dextrose and levulose, was absorbed most quickly of all sugars that were tested during the first 15 minutes after ingestion, and it did not flood the blood stream with exogenous (foreign) sugar.

"Honey also maintained a steady and slow decrease in blood sugar till the fasting level was again reached. It is pointed out that honey is so easily obtainable, and is so palatable and digestible, that it should be more widely used in infant feeding than it is."

HOW DO YOU PUNISH?

Many parents today are perplexed by situations arising out of the impulse to punish children for misbehavior.

Punishments give us a form of power over children that can be readily abused. What someone wittily called a "carriage of misjustice" too often occurs. A serious misdeed may be overlooked when Dad is in a good mood, while a mere trifling error calls forth parental wrath when he is cross or tired. Each case alone is bad for the child, but both together give him a false sense of values and are highly confusing.

Punishment is too often a kind of revenge against annoyances or grievances. Children are sometimes punished without understanding why, and they come to rather odd conclusions about the punishment. Your little girl may believe that her punishment or privation makes up for the misdeed—that the matter is adjusted thereby, and that she can start all over again, relieved of the consequences by having taken the punishment. Sometimes a sort of barter system may be set up in the child's mind—shall she trade in the weekly movie for the counter-advantage of swimming in the river again?

Another bad result of punishment is that it often makes the child dislike the punisher rather than the objectionable conduct. An important part of the purpose of punishment is to help the child to understand what is permissible and what is not. Usually this can be done without the punishment itself. Certainly whippings or other crude treatments of the kind do not give him any practical information as to right and wrong.

Before punishing, it is well to consider whether the misdeed is justly a punishable one. Clearly, if we punish children for temperamental disagreements or for harmless, though embarrassing, breeches of etiquette, or for mistakes of judgment, or insufficient information, our ammunition will have been used up when a real cause for punishment actually occurs.

Children, as a matter of fact, like discipline especially when they can understand it. Often their impulses are contradictory and such inner conflicts make them want guidance. Discipline should be more tolerant and liberal. Treat the child with consideration for his feelings. If he is concentrating on some activity, don't expect instant obedience. Put yourself in his place. It is surprising how many problems vanish by this attitude.

That, however, does not mean that the parent should be "soft". He should be firm and consistent, but reasonable and kind. Keep your discipline impersonal so that the friendly relation between you and the children is never lost. Make clear the reason for the discipline. Don't punish for every little mistake. Explain the better way.

Do not threaten the child with ominous forebodings. When there is anything unpleasant to do, do it and get it over with.

Differ on Discipline

Mrs. T. F. H.: My husband and I have frequent differences of opinion in matters of discipline. What do you recommend?

Generally, one parent is called upon to make the immediate decision in a case. Where the other feels this decision was unwise, the parents should discuss it privately, not when the child is present. If a reversal appears desirable, explain it honestly to the child as based on the other parent's reason. Sometimes a legitimate difference can be overcome by a compromise. If there is a fundamental conflict, consult a detached person who can view the matter objectively.

"HELLO AUNTIE" says JIMMY W. WALSH

"This is Jimmy and I'm fine, thank you..." and so James W. Walsh, aged 8, starts one of his many telephone chats with his Aunt in Strathroy.

"Once my husband preferred to go in town to see people—but now does all that on the telephone," says Mrs. Walsh. For $2.05 a month the Walshs have a private line, occasionally call a brother in Toronto on Long Distance. "It came in mighty handy last winter when my mother was sick. We had to call the doctor several times."

Twenty Tons of Voice

ENGINEERS of the Bell System supervise their streamlined creation as finishing touches are put on the twenty-ton, multi-voiced sound reproducer which, with a moving speaker system will serve as a corps of "private guides" to visitors touring the General Motors "Highways and Horizons" exhibit at the New York World's Fair. In the machine, 150 equally spaced photoelectric cell devices scan a motion picture film at the same time throughout its length. Thus 150 different parts of the same story are being told separately, at once. Moving cars, in the exhibit, carry spectators before a model panorama of tomorrow's highway system. Each car is equipped with speakers which give a perfectly synchronized description of the exact scene before which the visitor is passing. This is said to be the most intricate sound instrument of its kind ever developed.
