(Experimental Farms News) The revenue obtained from the farm poultry flock is influenced by the number and quality of eggs produced. The occurrence of soft or thin shelled eggs causes a considerable loss to the flock owner, espebuying easy chairs." cially during the winter months. The cause of faulty shelled eggs is usually due to the ration. With a large proportion of eggs required for you keep. export, it is particularly important that the shells are sufficiently strong to withstand the additional handling and shipping. Eggs with strong shells of good texture are also superior for hatching purposes, says R. M. Hopper, Dominion Experimental Farm, Brandon, Man.

Egg shells are made almost entirely of calcium carbonate and the first essential in avoiding thin shells is to provide an adequate supply of calcium to laying stock. The most common method of supplying this is to keep a small self-feeder in the pen filled with oyster shell or other high calcium feed. Sometimes laying stock refuse to consume oyster shell or other mineral in sufficient quantities for high egg production. When this occurs, two or three lbs. 1 of pulverized oyster shell can be in- 1 cluded in each hundred pounds of dry mash. Bone meal is also good for the same purpose. The addition | 1 Red Heifer, bred Aug. 6th of one or both of these materials to 3 Yearlings, 1 rising 2 years the dry mash is a means of compelling the birds to consume more 1 Heavy Wagon, good calcium.

To insure the efficient use of the calcium supplied to laying birds during the winter months, it is now considered essential to provide an adequate amount of vitamin D in the ration. This is accomplished by including cod liver oil or other feeding oil in the dry mash. About two per cent by weight is a suitable 3 pieces 10 x 12 x 14 ft. amount.

More recent investigations show that the addition of a small amount of manganese sulphate to the ration will improve the quality of egg shells. The amount recommended is very small, being only four ounces per ton of feed, and the cost is only 3 pieces 3 x 7 x 16 ft. a few cents. To obtain an even distribution of manganese in the dry mash it is necessary to mix it first 1 piece 6 x 6 x 10 ft. with one of the ingredients such as the meat meal and then add the meat meal to the main mixture. Thorough mixing is necessary.
