Presentation To Miss Ella Burns

Popular Bride of This Week Presented With Set of Dinnerware

A large number of friends of Miss Ella Burns of Richmond Hill gathered Sunday afternoon at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Russell P. Fox, Mill Road, and presented her with a beautiful set of dinnerware. The presentation address was read by Mr. Russell P. Fox and all present joined in extending best wishes to the popular bride-to-be who for several years has been local manager for the Bell Telephone Company. The committee arranging the event in addition to Mr. and Mrs. Fox included Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Greene.

The presentation address read by Mr. Fox was as follows:

We are gathered to honour a lady who may be truly described as the friend of everyone she knows, but who, in addition, has become one of the personalities of Richmond Hill—a most interesting and fascinating personality.

Poets have immortalized the smile of graciousness and kindness and have put high value upon the laugh of good nature and sincerity. One of them has ventured upon a thought the truth of which is universally accepted, namely that the person worth while is he or she who will smile when everything goes dead wrong.

Perhaps a key may be found in that observation to the reason why Ella Burns has so many friends. In business she has one of the most exacting and difficult positions in the community. Among other things it is her duty to make people like the telephone and consider it one of mankind's blessings.

We, in the rural parts where party lines flourish, can scarcely be blamed if we do not agree that it is always an all round blessing, especially at 2 and 3 a.m. when it may ring and ring not for us, but for someone else who cannot be awakened.

Her influence even at that uncanny hour, however, remains with us. Sorely tempted though we may be, we do not yank the instrument from the wall or cut the wires. And why do we not do some such thing so that once again we may sleep in peace. Is it not because we fear the soft voice of reprimand that will come from the lips of Miss Burns? Can we not, even as the ringing of the bell continues, hear her say?

"Are you not ashamed of yourself? That little telephone bell has a quality all its own. It may not have the tonal quality and appeal that characterize chimes, but it is a medium through which a great service is rendered to you and all telephone patrons."

And after you hear the soft voiced Ella in one of these famous little speeches, you are bound to say, or rather you would be bound to say to yourself, had you yanked the phone from the wall: "The gal is right. Often and often I have sat and listened eagerly for that little bell to ring and summon me to hear some voice I want to hear."

So thus does our gracious guest make her exacting and difficult duties less onerous. As the saying goes now-a-days, she makes us take it and like it.

However, our concern is not so much with these things now as it is with the great future before her. A week hence and there will be no more Ella Burns among us; in her place will come Mrs. Vincent McCullough. Increased opportunities for service will come to her in her new role, and with the eagerness that always is shown by her, she will seize these opportunities and make the most of them. Greater opportunities will come to her also for the perfection of those personal qualities that now endear her so much to us, and of these opportunities, too, we know she will take the greatest advantage.

So to-day, on the eve of her wedding, we salute her, and rejoice with her and the good man she is to marry and, with all our hearts we wish them every happiness.

As a little token of our regard and good will, Miss Burns, we who are gathered here and many others who could not be present, ask you to accept this gift, and may it be a means of having you remember us all in the years to come.

Each wore shoulder length veils of matching net and carried bouquets of pink roses and blue cornflowers. Mr. J. M. B.
