SOMETHING NEW IN PRESSURE COOKERS

The world's first pressurized blast furnace is now being built in Scotland. Working on the principle of the domestic pressure cooker, the new furnace speeds up steel output by from 15 to 20 per cent. At the same time experiments have solved the problem of the increasing mountains of slag. By a new cooling process the slag can be given the same surface picture as natural whinstone and used for building material and road material. A new plant to handle 3,000 tons of the material each week will be in operation in Scotland within two months
