Test Blasts Show Danger Of Coal Dust

By NORMAN ALTSTEDTER
Canadian Press Staff Writer
Buceton, Pa. —(CP)— Harry C. Howarth has touched off about 2,000 mine explosions.
No one has been killed or injured by the blasting he started 39 years ago. In fact he can be credited with helping to save the lives of thousands of miners.

Howarth, 58, is superintendent of the experimental coal mine operated by the United States Bureau of Mines in the coal-rich area about 13 miles from Pittsburgh. In his most recent test, the explosion Howarth started shot a sheet of flame 50 feet high and 150 feet long from the mine's mouth. A hand car left just outside the mine's mouth was picked up in the blast, splintered into matchwood and hurled 400 feet against the side of a ravine. The demonstration was put on for a group of scientists, mining experts and administrators who had just completed the three-week United Nations Conference on the Conservation and Utilization of Resources, held at Lake Success, N.Y. They visited the experimental station during a tour of conservation projects in the eastern United States.

Among the visitors was Dr. G. C. Monture, chief of the mineral resources division of Canada's department of mines. He noted that no experimental work on such a large scale is being done in Canada but many Canadian officials had studied the United States' developments at Buceton. The purpose of the experimental mine is to perfect methods of cutting down mine accidents. It was opened in 1919 following 88 major explosions which had killed 3,130 men in U.S. coal mines in the preceding 10 years.

The climax of each demonstration is the coal-dust explosion. Through this example Howarth claims he has convinced thousands of miners and operators that coal dust suspended in mines is a deadly danger. He says, however, there are some who still are not convinced. The experimental blast is set off by a stick of dynamite detonated 200 feet inside the mouth of the mine, which has some two miles of passageways. The blast ignites the 700 pounds of coal dust which has been spread thinly on overhead shelves and on the floor of the mine between the exploding point and the mouth.

The explosion demolishes everything in its path. How can coal-dust explosions be avoided? Again Howarth comes up with a concrete example. He drops a cloud of coal dust onto an open flame by means of a blast of compressed air. The ensuing explosion can be felt 100 yards away. Then coal dust and rock dust are mixed in a 65-36 ratio and the cloud formed from the mixture fails to explode under the same conditions. Howarth said the precaution of spreading rock dust in passageways of United States coal mines now is in wide use.

RECORD CENTRE

CHILDREN'S RECORDS
Nursery Rhymes, which have an age-old appeal for the age group from two to five years, are doubly enchanting when set to music. Perhaps the best recordings of these nursery songs are on the little 7 in. nonbreakable Columbia Playtime Records. Also on Columbia are the nursery rhymes sung by Gene Kelly — 10 in. records which size you may find more satisfactory for playing on the automatic record changer. There is also an excellent series of nursery songs by Frank Luther on 10 in. Decca Records.

The six and seven year olds will love the stories of Babar the Elephant told by Frank Luther on Decca. RCA Victor offers many albums of 10 in. nonbreakable records for this older age group. Peter Churchmouse
