Property Owners Urged To Make Repairs As Quickly As Possible

Preservation of property may well become an important factor throughout Canada in the months ahead. While the Government is placing no restrictions on building at this time, there are strong indications that the building materials pipeline will draw off quantities of these goods for use in the preparedness program. Production being at an all-time high in many of the factories producing such materials, it is doubtful whether 1950 levels will be surpassed by very much in the current year. This will mean that the requirements for Government building and the Preparedness program will come from normal channels leaving that much less for civilian consumption.

This is one strong argument for taking extra precautions to preserve property at this particular time. Another important argument is found in the need to combat the rising incidence of loss by fire in the country. Anyone who has ever used kindling wood probably has noted that rough, weathered or dry-rotted wood catches fire and burns more quickly than smooth protective coating of paint. Buildings which have been neglected are potential tinder in the event of fire. This applies to homes, garages, barns, stores, as well as business, industrial and institutional buildings. All structures having exposed, weathered woodwork in walls, trim and roofs should be carefully inspected, and reconditioned this Spring.

In the United States, the National Board of Fire Underwriters has published an article entitled "Protecting Property With Paint," in which it emphasizes the value of paint as a protective factor: "The fire insurance industry is particularly interested in the value of paint from the fire protection standpoint. Unprotected wood has a tendency to weather and to dry out until it becomes like tinder. Paint, however, keeps wood in good condition, so that a wooden building, painted, is less likely to take fire than one that is unpainted. Another good point is, that in order to paint, it is first necessary to clean up, thus eliminating the hazard of accumulated refuse.

Removal of cracked and broken boards wherever they are found in the structure and their replacement with sound, well-painted lumber, should be a must with every property owner. Special attention to roofs to make sure they are kept well painted, will be, in a very large proportion of buildings, vital precaution against the hazard of chimneys burning out or sparks from a neighbouring fire.

The psychological value of paint in promoting and maintaining respect for property is also very real. It is not often that anyone will use a well-painted structure as a repository for rubbish which may become kindling for a fire. Rather in the majority of cases, the instinct will be to respect the property and to keep it in a safe and orderly condition.

Finally, the savings resulting from the intelligent use of paint can many times outweigh the relatively small cost of paint protection. For example, in the interior of office buildings and industrial plants, paint while acting as a fire retardant, automatically promotes efficiency, health and morale.
