Big Jim Krochter Goes Berserk Aurora Bout

Splatt! and another villain bites the dust. Or was it a hero? When "Big Jim" Krochter, the Aurora cop, goes berserk he doesn't care who he hits.

It all started in a friendly little bout between the teams of Garner, Flicker and Krochter, and Diamond, Jensen and Szalay. After Szalay had flattened Flicker for the count in the first round, and Flicker had pasted Jensen silly with body slams to take the second, "Big Jim" got a bear hug on Diamond, and was squeezing his stomach through his ears.

As the hockey season approaches, another meeting will be held to organize the Bantam league. The organizers of the club are anticipating an active year of hockey with many improved facilities.

Last Bout For The Season Mangotich Successfully Defends His Title Against Jack Diamond

Wearied and worn, but still clutching his championship belt fondly, Gori Ed Mangotich exited staggering, to end the bout and the season in Richmond Hill last Tuesday.

In a return match for the championship, Mangotich proved his superiority over Diamond and decisively finished him off. For the first five minutes all was quiet, with only the crash of a flying wrestler echoing on the breeze, then Diamond made the mistake of getting rough. Rather rough in fact. He backed Gori into the ropes, then sloshed him one in the Adam's apple. A trick, which to put it mildly, shook Gori to the core. A startled look of "Oh, did you see what he did?" o'erspread Mangotich's countenance, and with a look of hurt innocence he biffed Diamond one that knocked him halfway through the ropes. "Was but the work of a moment to shove a foot here, an arm there and to roll back into a beautiful Mexican press. Diamond yelled "Uncle" right away.

The second fall was fairly short. A few punches were being thrown back and forth, and both men were on the dazed side, when Diamond grabbed Ed in a bear hug, and lifted him high into the air before jarring him solidly on his knee. That finished Mangotich for several seconds, just long enough to count him out in fact. Then he got up, and soaked the ex-champ a sizzler that left him doubled up in the corner.

The expressions were grim all round at the beginning of the last round. Mangotich was still suffering from the after effects of the illegal kneedrop, but his old confidence, conspicuous by its absence in the first two rounds, was coming back, and he grinned with fiendish glee as he poked Diamond in the eye. Then he turned around and used Diamond's own kneedrop to fix him. He let him have it with all his strength, then slapped on the Indian deathlock, and forced the submission from him.

LESSONS FROM THE OLYMPICS

One of the good points of the Olympic Games is that every time they are held there is progress made in the field of skill development and training and conditioning. When preparing for the Games the experts in nearly every country rack their brains in order to develop techniques designed to improve athletic skill. Then, afterwards, they return to their countries and start the same procedure in order to do better the next time.

This time there is more than usual to learn - which is indicated by the fact that so many records were broken. A few of the outstanding lessons we can learn are:

Protein Is Important

The value of extra amounts of protein in the diet of an athlete was demonstrated by the success of the French swimmers. In their training diet the French swimmers had nearly three times as much protein as is usually given. They got it in the form of lean meat, skimmed milk and a heavily concentrated protein supplement.

Mental Attitude Is A Prime Factor In Endurance

This was proved very dramatically by the great success of Emil Zatopek, the Czech distance runner, who won and created records in the 5,000 metres (a little more than 3 miles), 10,000 metres (well past 6 miles) and the classic marathon. He claims his success is due to a training system in which he emphasized the development of a tough attitude toward the symptoms of fatigue. Each day he would train himself to run harder when tired instead of easing up. As a result he has developed the
