Are they better homemakers than women with no outside interest 3. Should the farm wife support her husband in his public activities? 4. Are they or are they not suited to politics?

The members agreed that women very definitely have a special contribution to bring to public affairs. They have a keener interest than men in the finer points of education, culture and public affairs. The women who have outside incause they have a much broader outlook on a variety of affairs.

In the opinion of the groups, women should by all means support their husbands in public activities by encouragement, by appearing in public with them or by keeping the home fires burning while they are

The members thought that while some women are suited to politics, it appears that in Canada they have not taken sufficient interest in them to be able to make the contributions which might be expected of them. To be in this field they should have a desire and a talent for it.
