Starting at 10.30 a.m. and continuing till 4.30 p.m., games and races with various contests made up the program. Fifty children received down to lunch supplied by the committee, with the ice cream and milk being donated by Cousin's Dairy, and the bread and doughnuts by Weston's Bakery. Each child received a prize and a bag of candy.

Kenneth Judge, five year old son of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Judge, 2nd concession, Lake Wilcox, climbed a tree near his home last Wednesday, and came in contact with a Hydro wire two feet away. He suffered burns to his hands, legs and arms and was taken to Newmarket for treatment. Want Ads Are Not New;
They Are as Old as Recorded History.

Advertising has existed as far back as man used written symbols, and probably well before that. Back in early Babylon the merchants employed barkers to describe their wares to passers-by. The first written advertisements were want ads. They were announcements on papyrus offering rewards for the return of runaway slaves and bond servants. Lost articles were also sought through those early want ads.

In Greek mythology, when Psche ran away, Venus requested Mercury, "to proclaim her in public, and announce a reward to him who shall find her."

Both Greeks and Romans used the walls of their houses as places to scratch or paint inscriptions concerning their affairs. Many such inscriptions were found when Pompeii was excavated.

The oldest newspaper paragraph fitting the description of an advertisement appears to have been a "want ad" for a book on botany, printed in an early German newsbook in 1591.

Notices of arrivals and sailings of ships, with lists of cargoes, are found in most sixteenth-century English newspapers. The first paid advertisement in an American newspaper appeared in the second issue of the Boston Newsletter (May 1, 1704). It was about two anvils which had been lost, and read:

Lost on the 10. of April last off of Mr. Shiffen's Wharff in Boston. Two Iron Anvils, weighing between 120 and 140 pounds each: Whoever has taken them up, and will bring or give true intelligence of them to John Campbell Postmaster, (also editor of the newspaper) shall have a sufficient reward.

At first advertising occupied a relatively minor place in American newspapers, but by the middle of the eighteenth century many printers were becoming prosperous from the publication of three, four, and five pages of miscellaneous advertisements.

Gradually, as the confusion among the jumble of advertisements grew, want ads concerning one class of commodity or service were grouped together to facilitate the reader's finding what he was looking for.

Credit for "classifying" the advertisements is given to Benjamin H. Day, who founded the New York Sun in 1833.

Want ads have furnished one of the richest sources for historians seeking to learn about the everyday life of Americans. News stories in colonial newspapers often were colored according to the publisher's ideas, but want ads were honest and forthright, telling researchers about the needs and interests of our ancestors.
