Letter From Africa

The following letter was recently received from Mrs. Allan Doner of Igbetti, Nigeria, Africa. We know it will be of special interest to our readers in the Gormley district.
"Africa has two seasons, the wet and the dry season. That is why we say it has a tropical climate. In the dry season the wind blows from the north-east or from the Sahara Desert. Everything is very hot. The grass along the road and on our lawn gets real brown. They set fire to this dry grass and does it ever crackle! This gets it ready for the new crop of grass to grow. Then in the wet season the wind blows from the south-west over the Atlantic Ocean, bringing much rain. From April to November we have the rainy season and the rest of the year is dry season. When the winds shift from north-east to south-west, it brings us many thunderstorms and high winds during the night. I have never seen it rain as hard in Canada as it rains here. A few weeks ago we had a hail storm.
The little African boys are often sent to their farms to bring in a head-load of firewood. The day we had the hail storm, about six little boys came through our compound, carrying their wood, and their bodies dripping wet.
The children here are made to work quite hard. They carry pails of water on their heads from the well to their homes, without even spilling any. One day I saw a little fellow carry a large bottle on his head and he didn't even have to hold it there. Another time, our cook carried our pitcher of milk to the kitchen on his head.
The little girls' work is to help the mother carry the baby around. I saw a little girl on our compound having her first lesson in carrying a two-week's old baby on her back. Was she ever proud to do it? They hold the baby on with a long cloth tied around them. In the afternoon, I saw the same little girl playing and running with the other girls and the baby sleeping on her back.
The African girls and women always wear their hair braided neatly in rows from front to back. When they are working, their hair is out of the way. Then it is cooler too.
Very few people out here wear shoes. Some who are getting educated are beginning to wear them. The bottoms of their feet are tough like leather. The ground gets very hot but it does not hurt their feet for they are so tough.
When they eat their food, they sit on the ground, eat with their fingers, and you wouldn't want to eat their food. They eat yam which is about the size of a mangel at home but it is white. Then they eat rice, also soup, but very little meat. To buy beef is too expensive for them. So they set traps and whatever they catch - rats or mice - that is their meat.
We have a huge rock across from our compound. It takes 45 minutes to climb to the top. It is seven miles around the bottom of it. When it rains, the water pours down in one place in a big waterfall. On this rock live many baboons and monkeys. One day I was sitting on our veranda with our language teacher and we saw about five monkeys coming down the side of the rock.
The farmers now are planting their yam, corn, cassava, and ground nuts (or peanuts). When the corn comes up, they say the boys and girls have to stay on the farm night and day to chase away the baboons or they would eat all the corn when it first starts.
There are about 6,000 people living in Igbetti. Their farms lie outside the town and they go out each day to work there.
To work their farms, of course they don't have tractors or ploughs. The Africans just use a short handled hoe to break up the ground. They plant their seeds in ridges which they make in long rows. This is so that, when the heavy rains come, their seed doesn't get washed away.
The homes of the Africans are very simple but interesting. They are made out of mud blocks which have been baked in the sun. The roofs are thatched. That means they use bundles of tall dry grass and tie them all together for their roof. The rain doesn't come through, their houses do not have floors, or chairs, or beds. They just have a woven mat they spread on the hard ground and sleep there. They use mats or pillows - just cover themselves with a sleeping cloth.

The Africans love music and singing. We can hear them beating their drums from the market place. There is a wedding, they beat their drums all night, and only stop when day breaks next morning.
About 300 children go to school on our compound. They are all taught by African teachers. They are having a number of educational meetings in this area now. The government has plans for the mission to build and supervise four new schools in the Igbetti area, supply teachers and all. The government would supply all the money and leave the education in the hands of the mission. It is quite a project and opportunity for us and yet a lot of problems are involved too. They are trying to make education compulsory - so that is a good thing.
Then we have the Teacher Training School where I teach, also the Bible School, Church, dispensary where the sick people are looked after, buildings where the students live, and the three houses where we missionaries live.
On our compound, we have oranges, lemons, grapefruit, bananas, mangoes, pawpaws, and coconuts all growing, besides many beautiful shrubs and flowers."
