Aspen and Poplar Tree Grafting
In the heart of the wooded hills three miles west of Richmond Hill a neighbouring horticulturist and forester is carrying out experiments that are watched with interest by the world of silviculture. He is Dr. Carl Heimburger, tree breeder expert with the Department of Lands and Forests at the Southern Research Station, Maple.

One of the most interesting of Dr. Heimburger's projects is his work with the hybridization of the silver poplar and aspen. This was initiated through the requirements of the Pulp and Paper industries of southern Ontario for an aspen that is disease resistant and that would propagate rapidly from a stem-cutting. Poplar is valuable as a wind-break and fence row tree, while both aspen and poplar, with the development of wood products have proved to be useful for pulp, veneer, cellulose products and match stock.

Will Not Thrive Outside Habitat
Aspen has not so far, been successfully grown outside its native habitat in the northern latitudes. In an effort to graft aspen on poplar, Dr. Heimburger is experimenting with a large variety of both species obtained from fellow scientists throughout Europe, Asia, and the Americas. He is exchanging cuttings with world neighbours. The poplar is not originally native to Canada, but was introduced from the Mediterranean countries sometimes directly, and sometimes via France, England, Germany and Austria. The most successful cross so far has been between the silver poplar and the large-toothed aspen. Using methods devised by himself and now of world interest, Dr. Heimburger has developed hybrids from these two trees that will grow ten feet in two years.

The essential factor is speed, and Dr. Heimburger, a whirwind of energy himself, has innovated several methods to accelerate production. It had been the usual practice to make cuttings in the early spring and to graft in April. Dr. Heimburger makes his cuttings in November, simulates winter conditions through refrigeration and snow packing until late winter, separates the male from the female clones (branch clusters from parent tree), and makes his grafts in January and February. In the poplar, male and female clones are found on the same parent trees.

Distinguishers Buds by August
Where cuttings are concerned, he is able to distinguish male and female buds to be used the following year, as early as August. In winter and spring he does cleft grafting with the species of poplar and aspen desired. He has discovered that this is twice as fast as the old bark graft. It consists of making a "V" shaped notch in the poplar, inserting the scion cut in a wedge shape into the notch, and cementing the union with asphalt emulsion. The dwarf variety of trembling aspen, which flowers early, has been most successfully used as stock. Sterilized and well-fertilized soil increases the size of the seedlings. They remain in the protection of the greenhouse until the fall, when they are placed outside and completely banked over with soil.

When the spring comes, the survivors are tested. Those hybrids that did not winter through are discarded as being unsatisfactory. Those that survive are used again in various ways. Some are moved to another site, where they shift for themselves, without the tender care of their first year; some are used for further grafting, some are allowed to flower and used for seed; and some are distributed to the southern Ontario Pulp and Paper Companies, and to the world neighbours, who are anxious to obtain an improved strain.
