Secondary School Place For Agricultural Training-Forum

When Edgeley Farm Forums discussed "Education in Farming" on March 7, members were concerned with the questions of "How far should young people, planning to farm, go in school, what special agricultural training is necessary for modern farming and is the high school the place for agricultural education?"

Forum members believe farm youth should receive as much education as his finances will permit with high school training as the basic minimum necessary. With farming being a highly specialized occupation, the need for the highest degree of agricultural training is desirable.

There are many things to be learned from management, farm mechanics and all the skills that are needed for modern farming. Special training in Economics is needed most, for successful modern farming, the forum decided. Four-H Clubs help to develop in boys and girls a scientific attitude in agricultural practices. Agricultural Short Courses designed to give young people a practical education in up-to-date farming methods are highly useful for young farmers.

The Edgeley forum believes that the high school is the place for agricultural education. Here they could receive basic training in the first one or two years along with their 4-H Club work.

CARS ARE MY LINE

By Bud Lauria

If you're a convertible fan you are, indeed, a man or a woman in a hundred. Convertibles in this country make up just one percent of total production. They are comparatively rare, but for the small band of convertible addicts (and the much larger number who secretly wish they had a convertible) they are fun.

The granddaddy of the present day convertible was that famous and handsome car that is no longer with us, the Cord. Before the Cord convertibles were rumble-seat roadsters or four-door sedans with drop tops. It was the Cord that introduced the rear quarter windows that pivoted down, and the top disappeared completely into a metal-covered box.

If you are a convertible owner now, or want to be someday, keep in mind that the convertible part of the car needs some special attention. The rear plastic window, if you have one, should never be brushed with a dry cloth. Dampen the cloth so the plastic surface won't be scratched.

The top itself should be brushed occasionally too. When you're putting the top down, make absolutely sure there's nothing in the box the top folds in to. It's such a handy place for storing odds and ends. The plastic window, when the top is going down, should fold in one neat crease to keep it from cracking.

If you love a convertible, you're going to love one without any advice from this end. And the fact is, we often have some fine, well-cared-for convertibles on the lot that will keep you warm and snug in winter and open to the sun in summer.

Ever hear of a windshield that rolled right back into the hood of the car? That's one of a few screwball inventions we want to tell you about next week.
