CARS ARE MY LINE
 By Bud Lauria

WHEN BETTER AUTOMOBILES ARE BUILT . . .

Sure, the lines of most cars are lower this year, and Buick is among them, more than three inches lower in some models. In most cars, that's the whole story, but with Buick it's only half the story.

It reminds me a little of the story Ron Bailey told me of a woman he knows who borrowed the family car to drive over to her sister's for the weekend. A cop stopped her for going the wrong way on a one-way street and she was mad as blazes. "But," she fumed, "I AM going only one way."

She was right, and then again she was wrong. And that's the way it is with many of the cars with lower lines this year. The car is lower, but they've done it by putting the drive shaft through a tunnel that sticks up into the car floor like a camel's hump.

I don't blame them, really. For years everybody has thought that's the way it had to be—you could have either a flat floor but a high car or a low car and a bulging drive-shaft tunnel. That's the way it had to be—until Buick came along.

What Buick did is simple, but important. They put a second universal joint in the driveshaft near the rear axle and this accomplished what used to be impossible—a lower car AND a lower driveshaft tunnel.

They've said for years "When Better Cars Are Built Buick Will Build Them. That's especially true this year. I know it already, but I'd like you to discover it for yourself by dropping in to look around.

A few words next week on the new Buicks.

Facts About Milk Is Milk Constipating?

This belief has become so firmly grounded that it merits scrutiny. Milk is a liquid, quickly and thoroughly digested. It contains no roughage and is therefore completely absorbed. Consequently it contributes no residue which can aid in the general process of clearing the intestines. Milk therefore functions best when combined with other foods in a mixed and balanced diet containing a variety of fruits, vegetables, and other foods which provide residue so important in a properly functioning intestine. Milk then, cannot be considered constipating if taken in its proper place, in a varied diet.

Mr. N. Burr, Mr. L. A. Hood, Mr. Bill Hood, Messrs. Reid, Gordon and John Brumwell and Mr. Roy Boyington have all been on hunting trips.

Headford W.A. met on Tuesday last for its November meeting in the Church. It was decided that for the Christmas meeting each member bring some small personal gift, in holiday wrappings, to be sent to the girls in the Victoria Home. After the business, the meeting was turned over to Mrs. Wes. Clark, in charge of the devotional service. Then Mrs. Clark introduced the guest of the evening, Miss June Collard, who really needed no introduction to the most of those present. This past summer, June had realized her long standing ambition and enjoyed a trip to the United Kingdom and Europe. She shared with us the lovely pictures she had taken accompanied by such a delightful running commentary on them, that we almost felt we had been there ourselves. During a short break (there were so many pictures), Mrs. Ben Terry read a beautiful poem on the Scripture theme, and then delighted us with a whimsical original reading. After the rest of the slides Mrs. Mer Leek thanked the guest of honour, and Mrs. Clark as hostess, served dainty refreshments. We were delighted to have Mrs. Weycraft and Jane as visitors. There are still some ballots not returned, and the committee would like to get them all in as soon as possible. December meeting will be at the home of Mrs. Hugh Deverell, when there will be an election of officers.
