Now that Christmas has come and gone and the turkey is reduced to a mere skeleton, some happy reflections are bound to remain to brighten the remaining days of the year.

I am sure many thoughts are dwelling, first on the attractive little leaflet containing thoughts for "Family Worship in the Home o. Christmas" which the Rev. and Mrs. Harold Davies enclosed with their Christmas cards. These little papers were greatly appreciated and most helpful in aiding this community to more than ever "put Christ back into Christmas."

Then there are recollections of happy Christmas parties and family gatherings which make the Christmas season such a joyous one.

Te comings and goings within the community included a family Christmas dinner at the home of Mr. and Mrs. R. J. Darlington with guests Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Kingston of Palermo, Mrs. W. Kingston and Miss Helen Kingston and Miss Vera Kingston of Burlington.

Jim Darlington Jr. is home from the Ontario Agricultural College, Guelph, until January 5.

Missed on this happy occasion was their son, Don, who is convalescing following a spinal operation in the Orthopedic Hospital in Toronto. Don expects it will take three months before he can make a full recovery. In the meantime, his many friends extend to him the season's greetings and best wishes for a comfortable return to health as possible.

Mr. and Mrs. Ewart Burns journeyed to Rosebank to spend Christmas with Mrs. Burns' brother-in-law and sister, Mr. and Mrs. J. Burton and family.

Meet The Millers

Interesting People Who Operate Old Established Maple Business

by Mona Robertson

The Miller family of Maple, Ontario, have been in the flower business, wholesale and retail, for close to 100 years — their well-known greenhouses on Keele St., Maple, being opened in 1923 by the late Bernard Miller, father of the present managers, Cal and Mike Miller. Mrs. Bernard Miller is the owner since her husband died in 1935.

Miller's Greenhouse enjoys good business connections with the people of Maple and surrounding districts, serving King, Aurora, Richmond Hill and points west, as well as customers in Toronto. And as a mark of success, Mike Miller said that for 30 years collections have been 100 per cent, with no bad debts — which is an enviable record indeed.

Apart from the usual annuals — flowers and plants — Miller's greenhouse specializes in carnations, chrysanthemums and snapdragons, along with the growing of hot house tomatoes.

Millers' has a staff of four permanent members with part-time seasonal help as needed. In the greenhouse they do all kinds of designing—a specialty with them—with a special mention for the lovely corsages so artistically arranged by Miss Alice Miller. Time was when the Millers grew all wholesale stock, but now, with the changing times, they are going in more and more for retail growing.

Benches of wood sidings, with cinders for good drainage six inches in depth and a good rich top soil covering them are filled with plants the year 'round. Unlike roses which are grown in Richmond Hill greenhouses and bear from six to eight years with time out for rest periods, Miller's flower groups are short-termed and are three to six months affairs.

When we visited the Millers' Greenhouse recently, the snow lay deep on the ground around the long, glass-walled buildings, but inside the warm, balmy, sweet-scented greenhouses, Chrysanthemums were a riot of bloom.

Viewing rows and rows of colourful 'mums, we were told by Mr. Miller that these plants were started in the middle of July. Following initial planting, weeding and watering the plants are allowed to grow steadily, without demanding too much attention other than the regulation of temperature controls, and a keen lookout for fungus, mildew and rust.

As the plants progress, watering time is cut down, thus insuring a strong hardy crop.

Miller's Greenhouse has 30,000 square feet under glass, with a separate section for their huge furnace which consumes 400 tons of coal, ten months of the year (heating from September 15 to June 1st) and a special shipping room where the beautiful flower arrangements, bouquets and plants are made up. When we were present we particularly admired a centerpiece about to be delivered, designed so that the bright golden 'mums were a colourful compliment to stately bronze-coloured 'mums nestling in greenery.

Outside the greenhouse, on the north and west gables particularly, we noticed Millers were using plastic covering and on querying Mike Miller learned this is a new departure for greenhouses, started in the States. Experiments will not be revealed completely until a 10 year period of trial is completed but in the meantime Mr. Miller said plastic sheeting has a great many uses around the greenhouse and is excellent for winter use in keeping out drafts.

"Queen of the Autumn"

The Chrysanthemum is a native of Japan which has adapted itself to every temperate climate throughout the world, Mike Miller told us.

And the 'mum species is divided into four classes:

1. The early type (the largest).
2. The Anemone, or Shasta type, which is a large single flower.
3. The Single, the pushpinion type and
4. The ever popular "pom pom."

The names of these various beauties are just as romantic as a flower-lover could wish. Galaxy, Valencia, Acclaim, Snowcrest, Golden Cord, Corsair and Buccaneer, the latter three as you might guess in the bold, brilliant reds and golds and electric bronzes so widely admired.

When western growers first began to experiment with this eastern flower, blooms had a limited range from November to early December. But then, back in 1931, it was discovered that by shading certain varieties for 20 days — four hours daily — they could cause the Chrysanthemum to flower much earlier. More progress in prolonging the growing season took place during the second world war, when by experiment it was discovered that by shading and lighting at about 20 days periods they could now have Chrysanthemums any day in the year. Before 1933 it was only possible to enjoy these flowers in the fall — and that is how they acquired their original title, "Queen of the Autumn."

"The 'mum is the greatest all round flower in existence," Mike Miller said, "for it is possible to keep some varieties, such as pom poms, up to six weeks, other varieties last three weeks."

The Chrysanthemum is now used so much in designing work, the ratio is about 20 to 1 of any other flowers, Mr. Miller said. Retail florists find the 'mum is one of their best stock flowers, since it can be used up to two weeks without any loss of bloom, fading or withering.

Miller's Greenhouse also grows as its second and third largest crops, Carnations and Snapdragons and Mike Miller proceeded to tell us the history of these lovely flowers too.

"The Carnation goes back as far as Egyptian days," he said, "centuries before the time of Christ." Discovered in early writings, it was called, "The clove of commerce."

Rediscovered by the English, hundreds of years later, it became very popular, the English people taking to its regal beauty very kindly. The "Clove" became the Carnation following its use in coronation ceremonies and was chosen as the Royal flower. As many know, the stately and spicy-scented Carnation was the favorite flower of the late King George VI.

This flower has made very rapid strides throughout this century. It loves sunlight, moderate temperature and is a clean-growing flower which is free from disease attack. The Carnation is also very popular with retail florists for its beautiful colours and the fact that it lends itself admirably to any bouquet. It is used much in design work and wedding arrangements. There is not another flower that can be pulled apart so easily for designing, Mr. Miller said.

Carnations carry clear-cut names which typify their charm such as Siren Red, Starbright, Neptune and Jupiter. A recent innovation in the Carnation family is a striped flower which reminds one of Christmas candy canes with their clear red and shining white markings.

Snapdragons—Anything But Fierce

The Snapdragon is not known as far back as the carnation or chrysanthemum, but suffice it to say that its popularity with experimenters in the growing fields has developed it from one or two varieties, to well over 100 varieties now — with no end in sight for the field of research here.

Until possibly 25 years ago, the Snapdragon was not an outstanding commercial flower. Then Cornell University began research work with the plant — and now it can be grown just as well as the chrysanthemum, the carnation or roses. And as a result of special care, one could not begin to compare the lovely flower of today with the small, almost unknown, flower of a quarter of a century ago.

The Snapdragon likes reasonably cool temperatures, but even on really cold winter nights a 45° temperature is ample. As the sunlight and the temperatures increase in the spring of the year, the temperature can be raised to 50°. Because of its soft growth, however, warmer conditions must be watched carefully.

This delicate looking — yet extremely sturdy — flower, prefers dry soil in winter to retain good hard growth later. It does not like to be in moist ground, and will "disappear" from your garden if planted in wet earth.

There are many different shades of Snapdragons which make the flower valuable for practically every occasion: floral designs and hospital work to name only a few.

Early varieties of Snapdragons were named Marylands and Maryellen being pink in shade. The new hybrid varieties, which range in all the lovely pastels, wear such names as Citation, a yellow pink; Snowman, Whirlaway, bronzy-pink; Pink Cloud; Pink Ice and Cheviot Maid — not a few of these were named for famous race horses, who also stood out as winners in their own fields.

After enjoying our visit to Miller's Greenhouse so much we would like to note that Millers are rapidly becoming famous for their hothouse tomatoes too.

Mr. Miller's remark that "With the rising population, food grown in greenhouses is possibly a greater necessity than hothouse flowers" showed the depths of his concern for Canada's mounting food problems — "supply and demand." Up until now, Canada, Mr. Miller said, has had to take a back seat to the United States, which exports most of our tomatoes to us, but here is one grower who believes there is a great future ahead for Canadian growers since home-grown tomatoes have a better flavour and quality than those imported.

Experiments are carried on with these plants also, and the Millers find that the best variety is the V121, a hybrid which shows good resistance to mildew and is a very free producer giving a good yield with very little rot, and averages four tomatoes to the pound.

Needs Met Right Here

In saluting other florists in this district, Mr. Miller said this area can boast that it has the finest greenhouses in Ontario, with H. J. Mills and Bedford Floral concentrating on roses — which are gaining in fame and popularity every year — the beautiful Iris grown by R. D. Little; Endean's, which supplies excellent nurseries stock (Endean's you may recall did all the landscaping for the laws adjacent to the Toronto Subway) and other equally well-known growers becoming established in the district, the customers need not go far to have the finest in flowers, shrubs and plants.
