Christmas Cards Gain Popularity

"Just a cheap old ratty and insignificant Christmas card... to remind you of me. Merry Christmas."

That's a sample of the kind of lively humor to be found on a type of Christmas card zooming up in popularity and which should be in plenty of evidence this Yuletide season.

This "contemporary" humor usually — but not always — jokes fun at the card's sender rather than its recipient.

"For example, take the one that loudly proclaims: 'Thoughtful, generous people give presents... and then there's me.' Or there's the one covers wear finger marks, that explains 'I'm sending you this Christmas card because... they made me buy it when I got it dirty. Merry Christmas.'"

Although Christmas is essentially a traditional time of year and a time for reflection, an interest in such greeting cards has been increasing tremendously.

"Reason for this, I think, lies in the fact that they reflect modern, relaxed living. They are particularly popular with younger people who don't like to seem sentimental in the cards they send."

A Christmas card that should prove a let down to its recipient is this one from hubby to wife. It shows the man of the house, a smug look on his face, telling his better half: "I got you a wonderful new washer for Christmas."

And, the washer is there all right, in the card. Only, it's the type used in water taps. However, the sentiment is a sincere, "Merry Christmas."

A greeting that should be a rib tickler for cigarette smokers is one declaring: "This card wishes you GOOD... like a Christmas card should."

"Contemporary" humor is carried into some of the New Year's greetings also. One of these shows a bottle of champagne on its cover. "I got you a big bottle of champagne for New Year's," notes the opening remark. Inside, we find a red-nosed gentleman explaining "It was just delicious. Happy New Year."

Takes 2 To Detect Cancer — You And Your Doctor

Stomach cancer and not lung cancer is the most serious type in Canada, according to figures on cancer deaths released by the Canadian Cancer Society. In fact, both stomach cancer and cancer of the intestine account for more deaths than does cancer of the lung. Together they caused one quarter of all cancer deaths in 1957 while lung cancer was responsible for less than one in ten.

The figures show that 21,739 Canadians died from cancer during that year: 11,740 males and 9,999 females. Stomach cancer was the worst with 2,885 deaths, followed by intestine (2,568) and lung and bronchus combined (2,138).

The same anomalies that show up year after year were again evident. For instance the number of fatalities from cancer of the stomach in men (1,929) was more than double the number in women (956). More than seven times as many men as women died of cancer of the lung. Cancer of the large intestine continued to be the only comparable site in which the number of female deaths (1,343) exceeded the males (1,213).

Breast cancer continues to be the most serious type for women with 1,935 deaths which is an increase of 135 over last year. On the other hand, deaths from cancer of the skin, cervix, and uterus continue to decrease. This is partly due to the fact that persons are more alert for symptoms and report for treatment earlier. Officers of the Canadian Cancer Society point out that cancer of accessible sites can often be discovered early and successfully treated by surgery or radiation or a combination of both.

Although the cancer death rate (131 per 100,000 of population in 1957) increases slightly each year, this is related to the fact that other diseases such as pneumonia and tuberculosis which formerly accounted for a large percentage of deaths have been conquered. As fewer people die from other causes, more die from cancer. Actually, more cases are being successfully treated each year.

The Canadian Cancer Society's educational programme is aimed at telling Canadians what they can do to protect themselves against cancer. By means of pamphlets, films, and public discussion it is working to reduce the fear and ignorance of the disease. But it does not suggest that the patient should rely on his interpretation of the much publicized "Seven Danger Signals." These and other types of information are intended only as guides. Since it is neither profitable nor desirable to attempt to describe all possible variations of signs or symptoms which might portend cancer, the Society places much emphasis on the statement that "it takes two to detect cancer... you and your doctor."

Charles Howitt Home and School
On Monday, November 30 the general monthly meeting of Charles Howitt Home and School was held. The president requested a committee of five to be formed, consisting of — Chairman, Mrs. Shaw, Mrs. E. E. Spears, Mrs. Bob Marquis, Mr. Bob Everest and one teacher, to discuss Scholarships for Grade eight students.

The guest speaker of the evening was Mr. Maynard Haman, Inspector for this School Area. He spoke on "Administration of School Boards" now it was the responsibility of the Province dating back to the British North American Act. There are two types (1) section, (2) large unit. They divided Markham and Vaughan into sections and then sections went together and the schools were called Union schools. It worked well in the beginning when there wasn't as much travelling done. The school was the centre of activity. In the last decade it hasn't worked so well. In 1950 the township School Area was formed, also included Union Schools, parts of Markham and Vaughan.

In January 1960 the new school boards will be formed. The largest unit being formed will include all of Vaughan, Concord, Pine Grove etc. Council made this change because of concern over the railway and finances in the future.

Advantages hoped to be derived from this greater unit (1) It will even out the school tax paid by all in the township. (2) Mass buying of school supplies. (3) Standards in Education of whole township will be equal. (4) Kindergarten for all. (5) Industrial Arts, Home Economics and teachers' supply will be better.

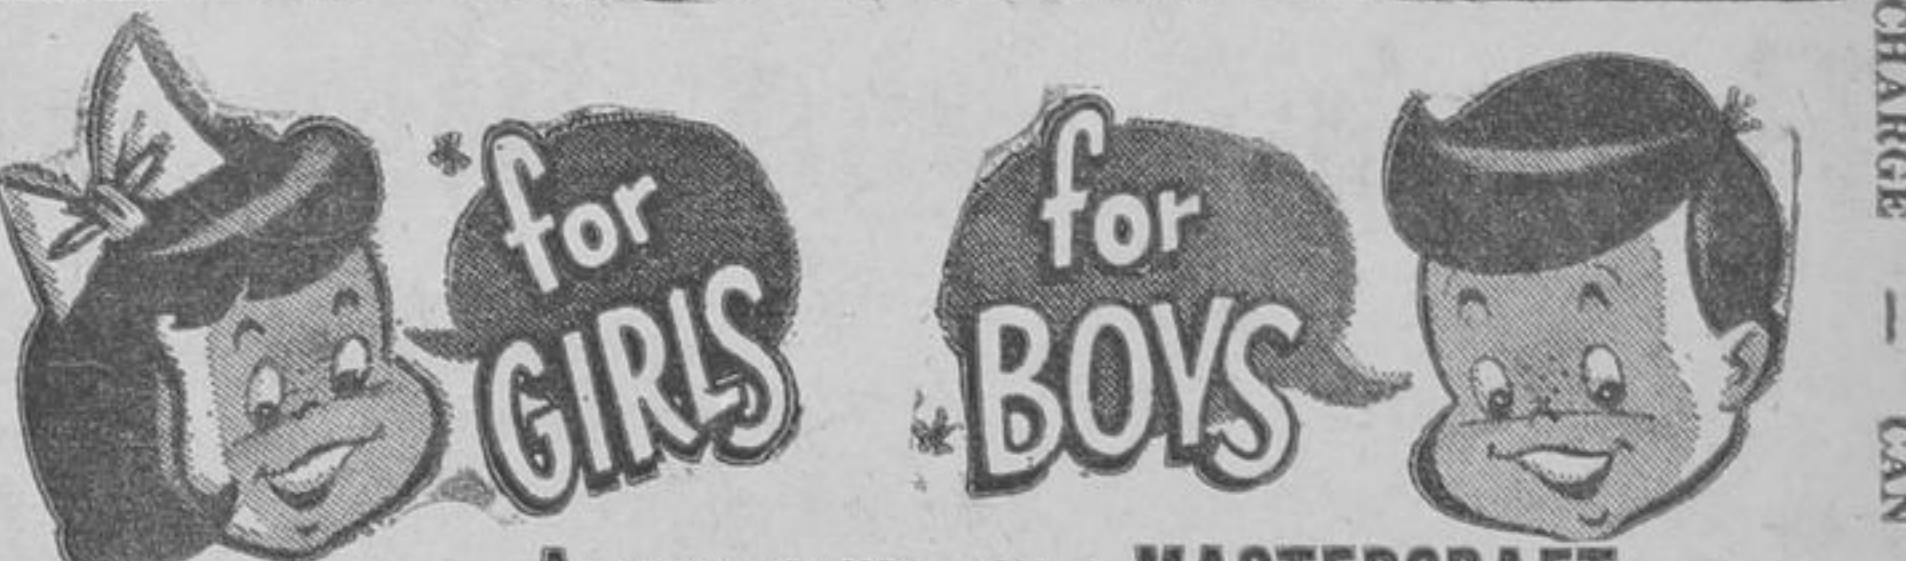

They hope for classes for gifted children extension of Auxiliary classes and Physical Education instructors.

Mrs. Les Walters thanked Mr. Hallman for explaining the Administration of the School Area so completely.

In the Senior room Mr. Robson and Mrs. Pressley impressed on the parents to supervise homework. To give the student a quiet place to study. If the child finishes his given homework he can always read over his book work, social studies and science or the hear arithmetic tables. Reading is very important, the student should do some every night even if it is only the newspapers.

All the members met back in the Auditorium for a Sing Song led by Mr. Robson with Mrs. Howard at the piano.
