GRAVE REMINDER—German Boy Scouts, remembering the Nazi past, perform a good deed by fixing an abandoned Jewish cemetery in Bad Kreuznac.

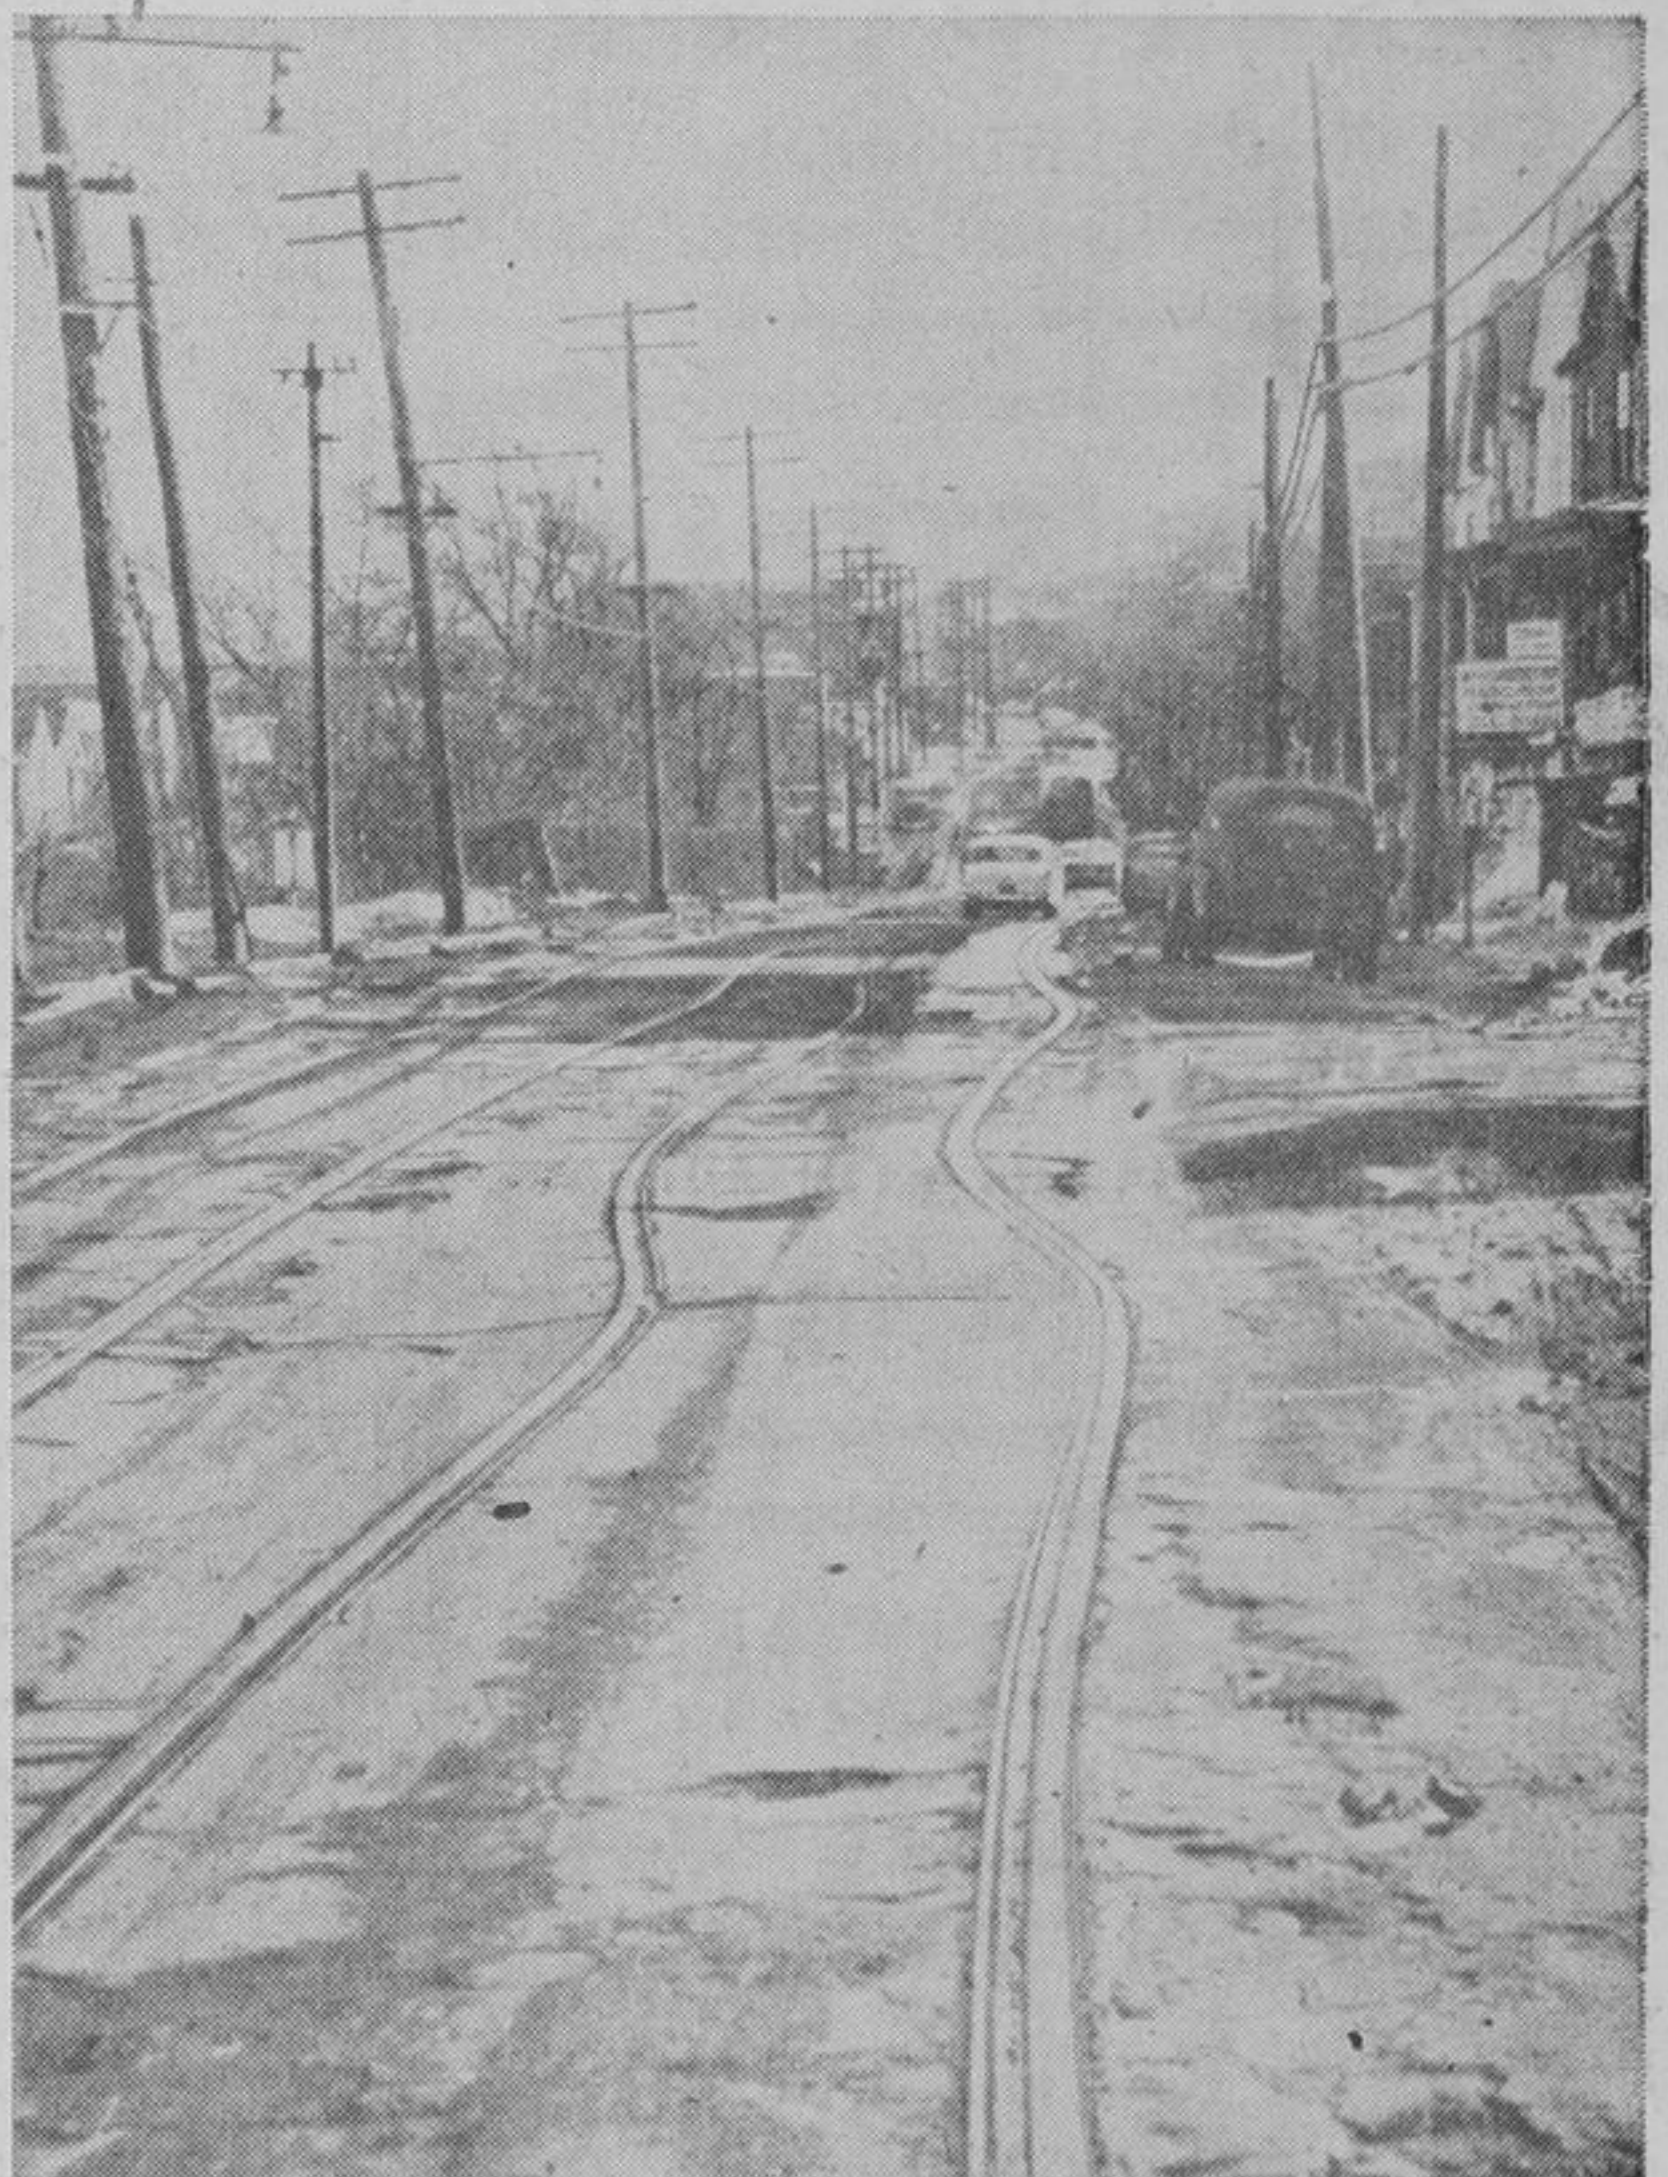

REDS GET GREEN LIGHT—One of several modern traffic centers in Peiping is open for business. The policeman in the brightly-striped booth has been equipped with latest electronic controls.

ART IN THE 'ALLEY'—Art lovers have heard of the French quarter, but Bruno LoMoro is running a "studio" that should be called the Close quarters. He's finishing a sculpture in his narrow, four-foot wide studio in New York City.

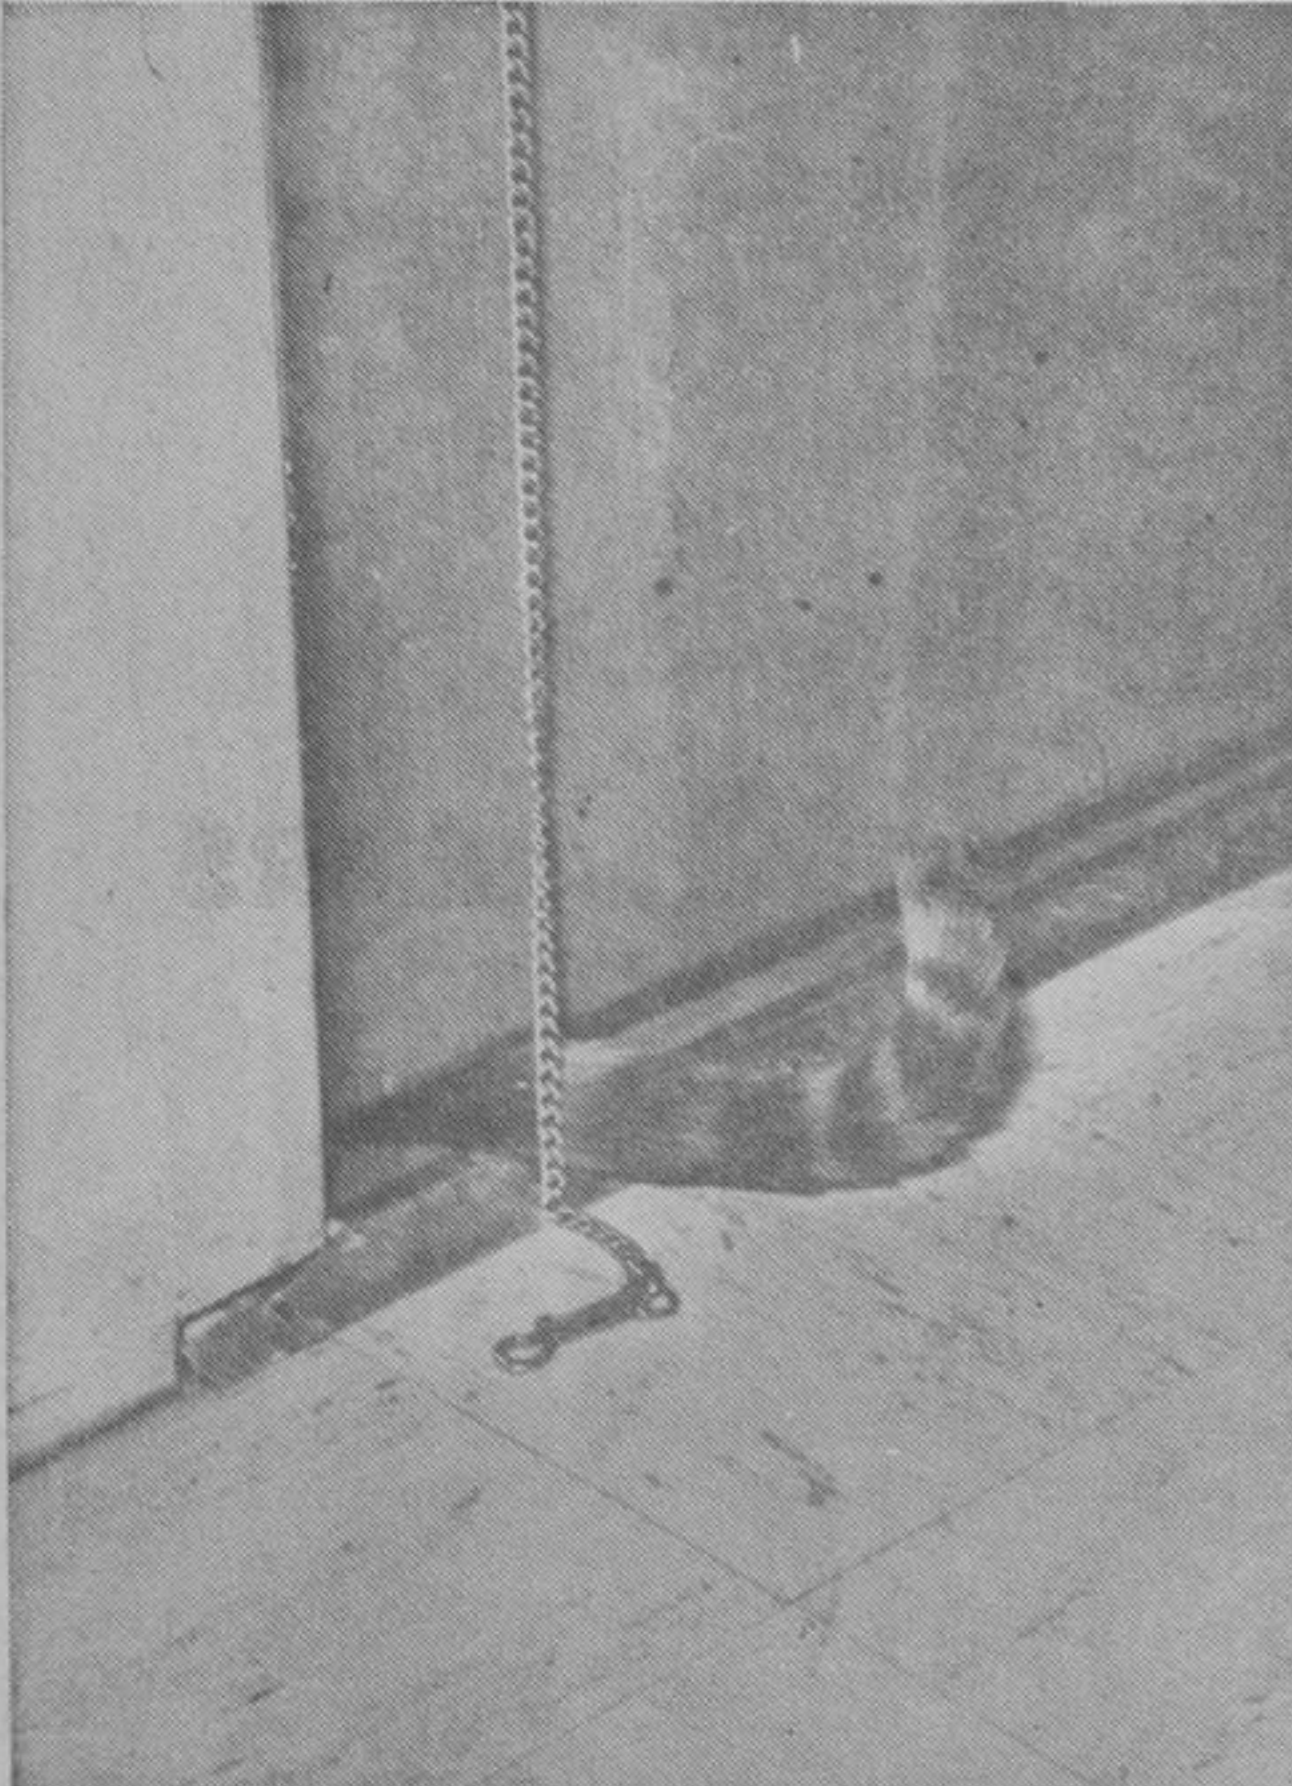

PUT THIS LIGHTER IN A PURSE—Too big for anyone's pocket is this eye-catching cigaret lighter affixed to a goat's curving horn. This conversational piece, designed by Michel Pigneres, was shown in Paris.

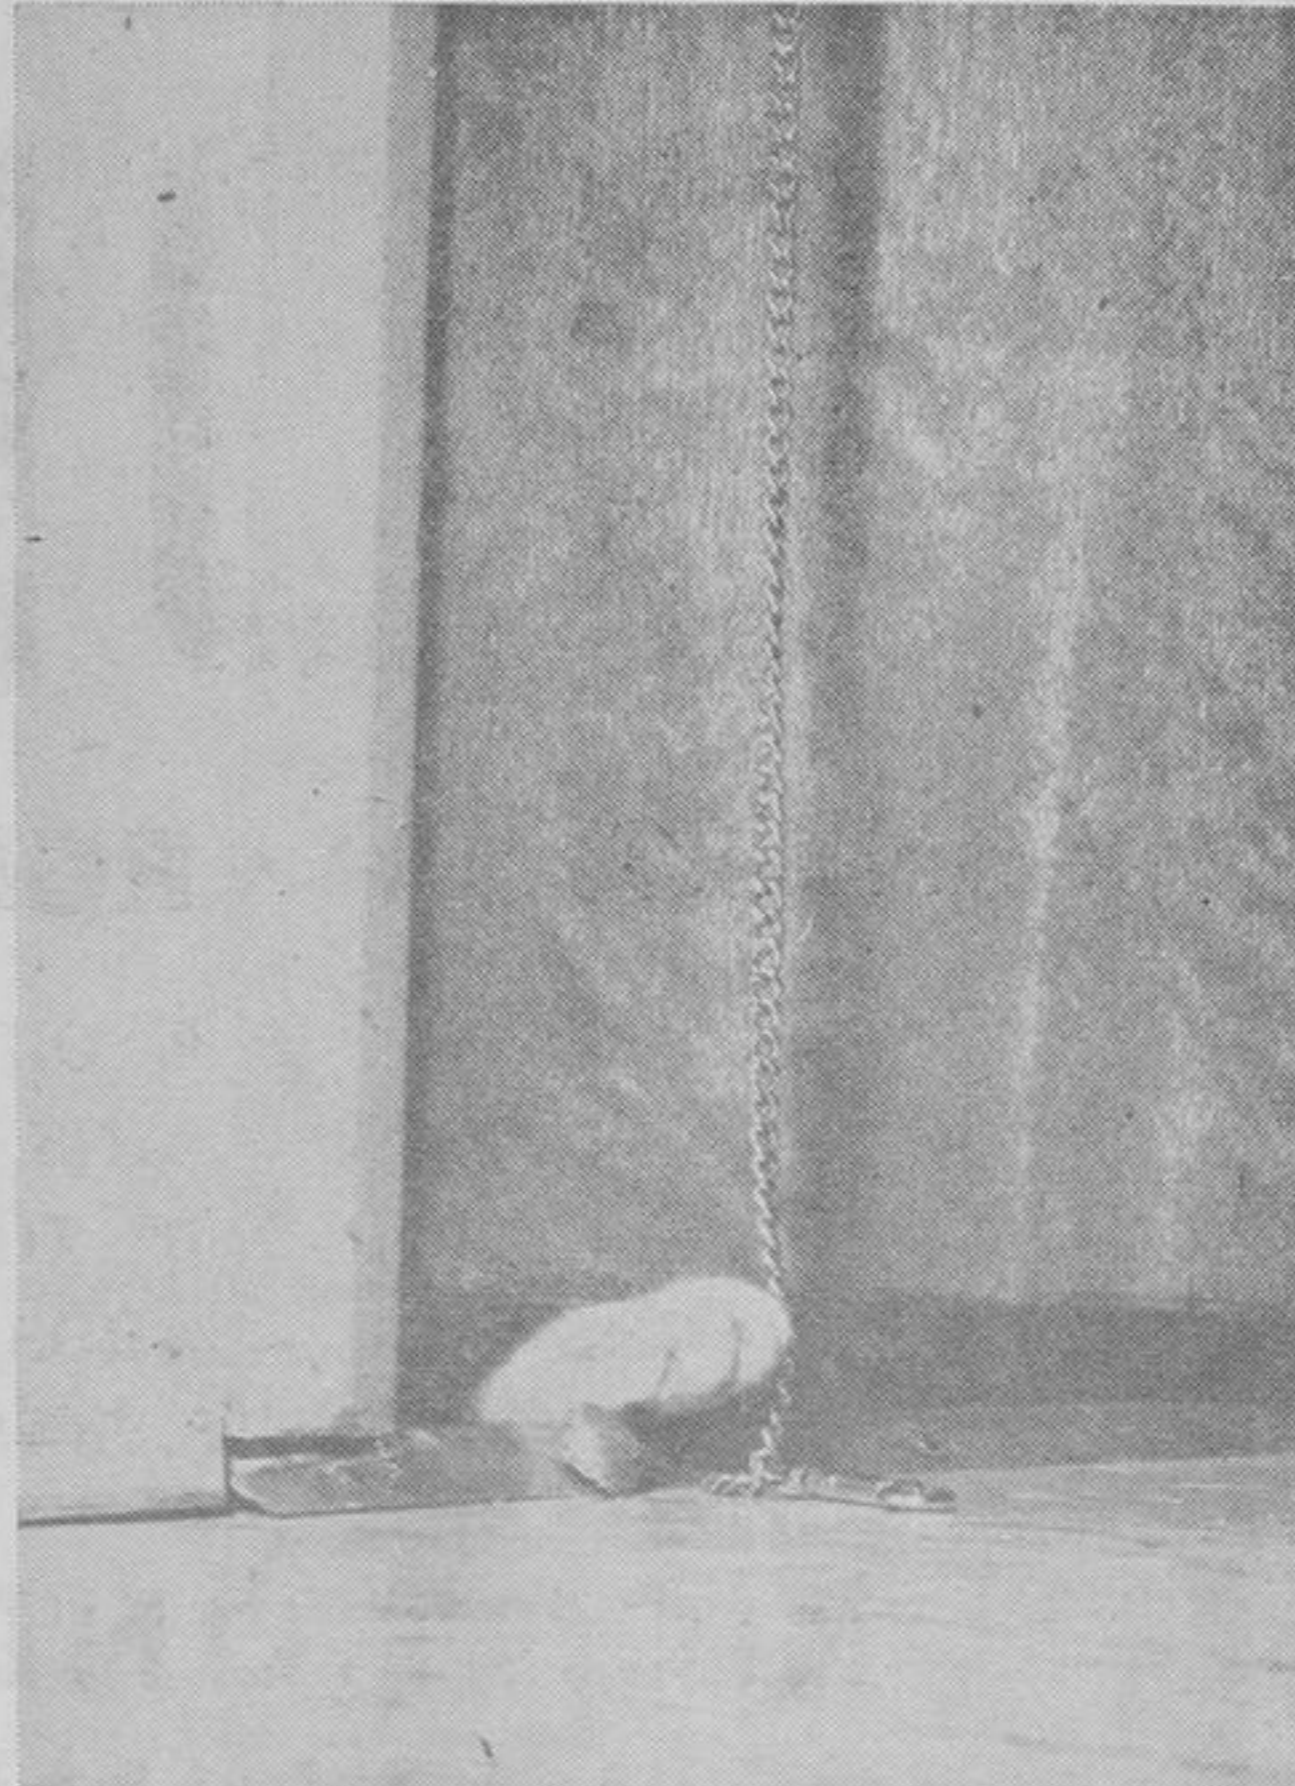

LIVING ON UNEASY STREET—Island avenue, in McKees Rocks, Pa., might well qualify for the title of "Skid row," judging from the wiggles in the street. Streetcars actually ran on these crooked tracks until they were replaced by buses a year ago.

A PUSHY CAT

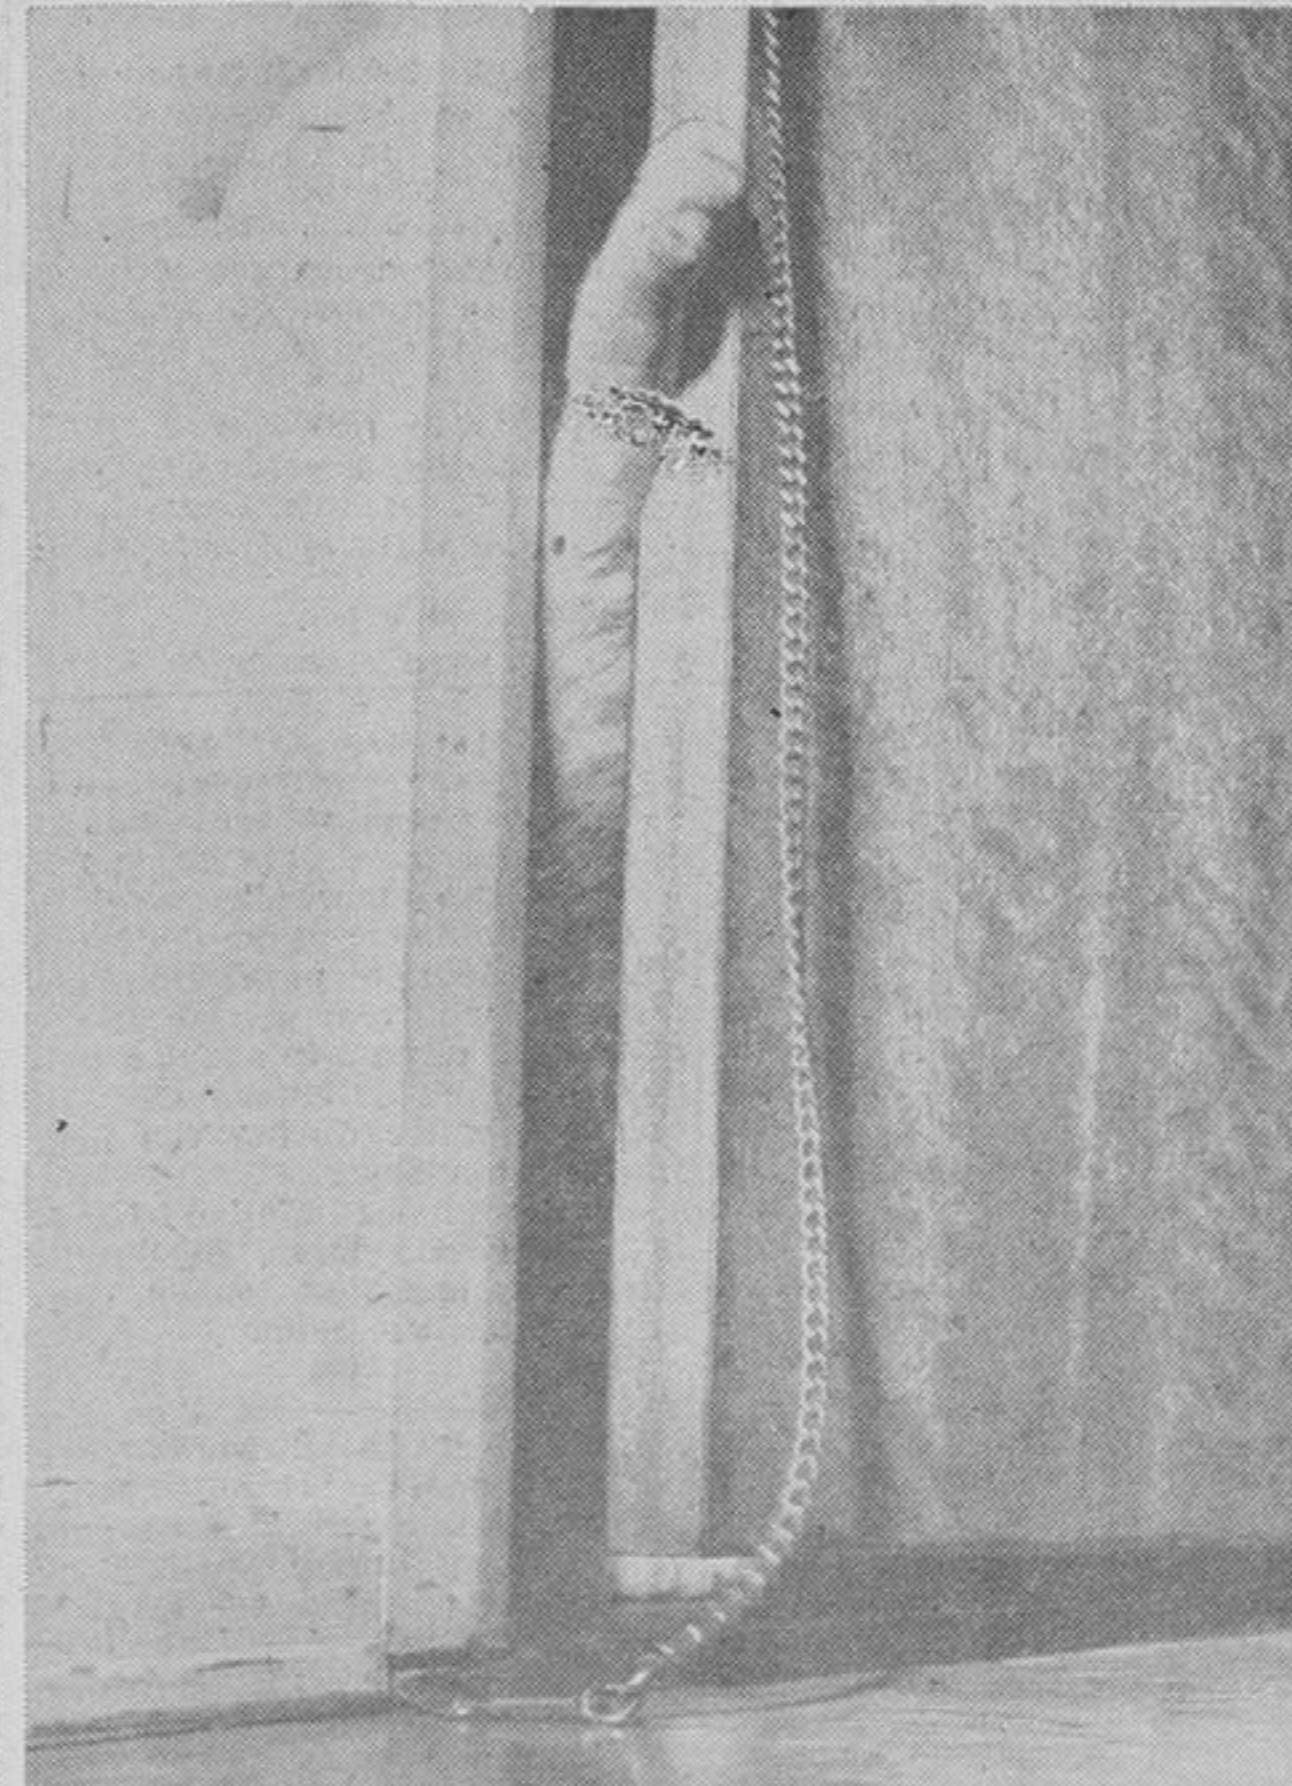

KIRBY IS A CAT who won't stay catty-cornered. Kirby is supposed to stay in the basement of his Huntington, N. Y., home, but he manages to break out by some adroit maneuvering. There is an inch-wide crack under the door. Kirby pokes his tail out through the crack and then he'll try a paw. Finally, he launches himself full-tilt at the door, springing its latch and forcing it open enough to sneak through like a cat burglar.

Kirby starts out by pushing his tail through.

Now the paw comes out. He's reaching for his biscuit.

Kirby now throws himself against door to force the latch.

With all his might, he squeezes through space.
