Life Miserable For Many Indians On Reserves?

Last week in "The Liberal" a classified advertisement under the column "Wanted" asked for good used clothing for children and teenagers on an Indian reservation. We contacted the advertiser and learned that among 176 persons living in the Parry Island Indian Reservation - near Parry Sound - a great many of them, especially the babies and children, are terribly impoverished. The children and young teenagers do not even have enough suitable clothing to attend school regularly. Mrs. L. J. Roberts of Thornhill, who summered with her family near the Parry Island Reserve last year, said she was shocked at conditions existing among some families on the Reservation.

"There is no work or industry up there, and although some of the Indians try their hand at farming, some terrible poverty exists," she said. Among the more resourceful (some are sick, some crippled and others apparently just plain lazy), one Indian woman of a most refined and likeable disposition walks six miles to and from Parry Sound, in order to support her four children and a crippled husband by doing housework.

New Hair Stylist In Richmond Hill

Richmond Hill welcomes a new hair-stylist to our town. She is Mrs. Rose Longe, who has taken over the former hairdressing salon of Chico, at 30A Yonge Street South in Richmond Hill. "I think every woman who is interested in herself, wants to improve herself," Rose-Ann told us as we discussed the latest styles in hair-do's in her attractive pink and green shop, and from our conversation we learned she does everything in the line of hair beauty.

Mrs. Longe, who studied high styling under Fascione has seven years of experience behind her; she was formerly with the Elsie-Ann salon in Toronto. In May she is moving her home to Richmond Hill and her three sons, aged 8, 14 and 17. Asked about 'hobbies' Mrs. Longe said she likes to bowl when she has time, and on summer week-ends Mrs. Longe and her three sons drive to Six Mile Lake for fishing and water skiing.
