Ontario's High Municipal Debt

The yearly statistics on Ontario's municipalities, now published, reflect a rapid growth in population, physical services, and above all, debt. It is clear that debt cannot accumulate at the rate of the past few years without seriously undermining the credit rating of the province's municipalities. Either the pace of installing new services will have to decelerate, or extra financial help will have to be given the municipalities by Queen's Park.

The debt rose from $220 million in 1947 to $1,305 million in 1959. Not all of the new debt can be attributed to new population needs. In 1932, the Ontario municipalities were $506 million in debt. The decline by more than 50 percent between that year and 1947 was caused by the reduction in services during the depression and the war. In the next decade, the municipalities not only had to meet the needs of a rapidly growing population, most of it urban, but also had to fill the backlog left by the lack of work done from 1932 to 1947. Small wonder that, from 1947 to 1959, the municipal debt increased more than five times.

The effect of the high birth rate during and after the war may be seen in the figures for education. The gross debenture debt for education stands at almost $800 million, compared with $250 million for general municipal improvements and about $300 million for utilities such as water and electricity. And it is precisely in the education field that the municipalities have lacked the help they need. However much provincial grants have risen, education now takes about half the tax dollar in virtually all towns in Ontario.

Admittedly, the province itself faces financial difficulties, and has had to cut back on some services this year. For the time being, the municipalities must make do with what they have. But there can be no tampering with education, which should have first call on the taxpayer's dollar. In a democratic, technological society, progress is founded on education. Unless some way can be found of attracting new assessment at a faster rate, some reduction in services may be in prospect for Ontario's municipalities.

Family Farm Still Important

There have been many assertions that North Americas farm lands are being concentrated in the hands of big farmers and corporations, with a decline in family units.

Generally speaking, those making such assertions contend that the family type of farm is the ideal base for the nation's agricultural industry.

In the winter of 1957-58 the U.S. Agriculture Department set out to investigate this aspect of farm ownership. It made a survey of the Great Plains, taking in North Dakota, South Dakota, Nebraska, Kansas, Oklahoma, Texas, Montana, Wyoming, Colorado and New Mexico.

This covers an important farming area comprising 47 per cent of the farm and ranch land in the country.

A report on that survey has just been completed. It said that it might be assumed that the total number of farms and ranch owners in the ten Great Plains states had decreased during the past ten or twelve years. Estimates show that the average size of farm ownership units has increased from 570 acres in 1945 to 643 acres in 1958.

"Any increase in the concentration of ownership during this period was slight," the report said.

Of the 830,000 ownership units estimated in 1958, less than one per cent were said to be corporations. These corporations held about 8 per cent of the land on an acreage basis but only two per cent on a value basis.

"The husband and wife combination is the most common type of owner," the report said. "Husbands and wives own either jointly or separately 49 per cent of the farm and ranch land. Partnerships other than husband and wife own another 20 per cent..

"Before one assumes that corporations, which, in this study, (includes some private institutions) own a disproportionate share of the farm and ranch land, one should realize," the department continued, "that much of this land (owned by corporations) is in areas that contain the less productive land -grazing areas, for example."

Individuals, as distinguished from corporations, were said to own about 89 per cent of the grazing land and 96 per cent of the crop land.

The number of persons with some interest in land was said to be much greater than the number of ownership

"Without counting indirect interests of persons through corporation and credit arrangements, at least 1,400,000 people have some direct ownership interest in the rural land of the Plains States," the department reported.

The survey showed that active farmers and ranchers were the predominant type of land owner. They represented 45 per cent of the owners. They owned 62 per cent of the acreage and 58 per cent of the land value.

The business and professional group of owners was said to represent only 9 per cent of all the owners. They held 8 per cent of both the acreage and value.

Housewives, laborers, clerical workers and persons of miscellaneous occupations combined represented slightly more than 25 per cent of the owners. They held 16 per cent of the

About 18 per cent of the owners were retired persons two-fifths of whom had been farmers or ranchers. They held 14 per cent of the land.

The survey showed that 45 per cent of the land owners did not live on their farm or ranch lands. They held 54 per cent of the land.

"Some of the owners who do not live on their land can be accounted for by farmers and ranchers who live on their farms only during the peak of a work season or who commute daily from their residences to their land," the report said.

The survey showed also that half of the owners were between 45 and 64 years of age and nearly 30 per cent were 65 or older.

The purpose of this is to avoid the necessity of repeating a full grade brought about by failure itself. Mr. McIntyre said that a grade in one year, and continue a case the teacher makes every effort to find out why the student reacts as he does, whether the reacts as he does, whether the necessity of repeating a full grade brought about by failure itself. Mr. McIntyre said that a school staff can only do so much in some cases. For example, when such a student is found to have no personal out-of-school friends or hobbies, then the school is not set up to solve the problem. On the other hand, it is not unusual to find that a bright but disinterested student is unusually sports minded. In such a case a teacher often can effect the desired rehabilitation of the student by securing his confidence through the physical training program and showing him that however desirable sports might be it is not the end in itself to a rounded, productive post-school life.

Year Old J. Boll Drowning Victim

One-year-old Jackie Boll, only son of Mr. and Mrs. Lee Boll, drowned September 15 in a partially filled swimming pool on the Vaughan township farm of R Hedges, east of Bathurst and north of Highway 7, where the parents are employed. The baby apparently crawled out of a fenced enclosure behind his parents' home, and tumbled into the pool. Richvale firemen applied artificial respiration and used an inhalator on the child for two hours without results. The boy was pronounced dead at 8.30 p.m. by Dr. Peter Morse of Thornhill. The remains rested at the Wright and Taylor Funeral Home, Richmond Hill and a graveside service at York Cemetery, Willowdale was officiated at by the Rev. C. G. Higginson of Richmond Hill United Church on Saturday.
