Character In Writing (5)

Your Writing Points Up Whether You're Logical

By Alex Sjöberg (CGA - IGAS)
It's surprising the number of people who cannot define logic. The logical person is one who approaches a problem slowly, scientifically, by gathering together a series of impressions into a solid, completed structure. If you write your m's and n's like the young Canadian jet pilot who penned these lines, you will be of a logical, scientific turn of mind because the m's and n's are more than anything, flat or round-topped. The fact that some of the m's and n's are a little peaked means that he now is to a greater extent than formerly expiring more of the ordinary problems of life. But wherever you find rounded, flat-topped m's, n's and s's, for example, you will know that the writer takes the logical approach.

Delivery of magnificent jetliners is expected year earmarked for early 1960.

In this writing there also is the analytical (the ability to sort or sift information, discarding what is not needed) but we will come to that in another article. Today we'll stick to the logical and in a logical fashion, show you a little about evaluation. With this in mind we direct your attention to this writer's firm, strong t-bars which are invariably made about two thirds of the way up the stem. He is practical.

A practical person does that which can reasonably be accomplished. Evaluation You will also note that some of the m's and n's are somewhat squeezed together. And that the writing has a good forward slant, which means he is emotionally responsive. But the somewhat tightly written m's and n's mean that he is conservative. Now then, when we evaluate, we say that he is a logical, practical sort who keeps a tight check on his impulses because he is governed by the common sense attributes ... and he is a little fearful of doing the wrong thing. A pretty good combination of traits for a young pilot, wouldn't you say? To you parents, if your child writes rounded or flat-topped m's and n's and if those letters are somewhat squeezed together, remember that he shouldn't be asked to make a snap decision in a matter unless he is thoroughly familiar with the subject. If he isn't thoroughly familiar, he will freeze. Such a child requires time to gather his impressions. Edison, who invented the electric light bulb had logical writing strokes. So did Abe Lincoln.

G. A. ANSWER BOX
L. B.: A child's fears normally reflect a lack of knowledge. Adult fears may be said to represent retained improper knowledge. Tad: If you always slant your writing as you did in your interesting letter to us then on a basis of that and other traits shown we must assume that pride, dignity and outward cheerfulness conceals a deep-rooted pessimism, a feeling that 'surely it will rain before the sun shines.' L.H.: Your writing goes with the artistic, color-conscious sort. You have an excellent memory. As a scholar, for example, you would rely on your memory more than your analytical powers because timidity prevents you from fully exploiting the analytical. Loosen up! The world loves you. L. C.: The way to your young man's heart is surely through his stomach. He loves good food. So do you. And your generosity would cause you to set a lavish table. Stuff the lad with hot mince pie covered with whipped cream and he'll fetch you the moon! J. J.: I'm afraid that you ARE emotional, impulsive, suspicious, clannish and tenacious. You are bound to fear competition where your love is concerned. Trouble is, you don't think deeply. Slow down, my friend. Your fear of competition will largely disappear when you exploit your very real abilities. W. C.: You're too intense and prejudiced to be an impartial critic, but you're learning because you certainly have a great desire to know. Kitty: While you and your friend are on par in your emotional responsiveness, you are clannish while he is gregarious. You prefer the small, intimate circle while variety is his meat and drink. He's not two-timing you when he dashes away. He is simply indulging that gay gregariousness. He never deceives anyone. That's all for this time, folks. Remember, those who wish to avail themselves of a 350-word typed, confidential character analysis for the nominal sum of $2 should submit a one-page letter of their handwriting, in ink if possible, to the G. A. Department, 'The Liberal', Richmond Hill, Ontario. Allow a week for the analysis. (Copyright)

The colour party for the Parade comprised Scouts, Fred Waters, Douglas Greig, Cubs, David Hansen, Tommy Post, and Guides, Adele Costoff and Beverley Locke. Personal Notes

Mr. Fred Waters was a guest of American Airlines on the first flight of the 707 Jet Flagship. Eighteen cubs and parents spent a delightful day Saturday when they visited Pioneer Village. All enjoyed a guided tour for two and a half hours which included a ride in a haywagon for the cubs. A picnic supper completed the afternoon. Birthday greetings to Darrell Richards and Billy Powell, November 7; Victor Follott and David Hansen, November 8; Donny Kurise, Kathy Ratchford, Janice Burnett and Judy Knappett all for November 9. Mr. and Mrs. William Bell visited the family on the weekend. Mr. and Mrs. Billy Powell visited in Minden last week-end. The Monday Nighters played euchre at the home of Mrs. Darrell Gouling. Prize winners were Mrs. Dorothy Cracknell, Mrs. Tim Saul, Mrs. E. Terry and Mrs. Reg Williams. Sympathy is extended to the Bruce Locke family on the death of Mrs. Locke's mother, Mrs. Isabella Locke, on Monday, October 10. The cubs held a special enrollment meeting Thursday night. The jungle opening was based on the Mowgli Brothers Jungle Story by Rudyard Kipling. An acceptance ceremony of new cubs was part of the program with the investiture of three boys, Bobby Woodward, Wayne Forster and Patrick Ouellet. The parents attending the enrollment were Mr. and Mrs. Woodward and daughters, Mr. and Mrs. Forster and daughter and Mr. and Mrs. Ouellet and three sons. After the enrollment ceremony games and Hallowe'en treats were enjoyed. The cubs closed the meeting with the mouse bowl. A special word of thanks is expressed to Mrs. Jean Clark, Mrs. Lorraine Forster and Mrs. Queller for their help in preparing for the canvass for UNICEF on Halloween by the Cubs, Guides and Brownies. Mr. and Mrs. William Bell of Jefferson and Mr. and Mrs. George McConnell of Claremont motored to Port Severn on Thursday to spend the day with Mr. and Mrs. Alex Aikenhead. Keep this Saturday afternoon free to attend the Jefferson Community Club bazaar. See "Coming Events" for time and date. Community Ladies Meet
As a prelude to Education Week -- November 6-12, 40 ladies of the Jefferson School Community Club enjoyed two excellent talks by distinguished visitors at their regular monthly meeting on Wednesday evening of last week. Jack Passmore, a former trustee of the Jefferson School Board, spoke first on "Education," after outlining the history of the school board 15 years ago when there was, (1) A teacher shortage, (2) Inadequate school facilities and (3) The planning and development of the new school. Mr. Passmore said, "there is a greater need than ever for education in today's world," and quoted alarming figures on the poor record of students who, enrolled in Grade 1, never complete Grade 13. "Only 10% of these ever reach University entrance requirements," he said. Mrs. Mona Robertson, vice-chairman of the new T. S. A. of Vaughan School Board, thanked Mr. Passmore. "As one trustee to another," after his enlightening address, after which Mrs. M. Hopkins, Grade 4 teacher at Jefferson School, spoke to the parents on Co-operation, listing such details as homework (which should be done with both T.V. and radio turned off); Honesty, which must be illustrated and taught in the home for the child's benefit and understanding, which must not only come from the teacher but the parents for the good of the student. Mrs. E. A. Terry, chairman of the club, thanked Mrs. Hopkins for her fine talk, and after presenting immediate items of business such as the bazaar planned for November 5th, invited all to join in a friendly cup of tea
