DEPT. OF HEALTH

TWP. OF NORTH YORK Work and Rest

Without balances of work and rest, the most rugged constitution will buckle. The need for this balance is illustrated in part by the nature of the body's chemistry. When any muscle works hard, a lot of extra fuel (called "glycogen") and oxygen is used up. As more fuel is burned, greater amounts of carbon dioxide and other waste products are produced. In this respect the muscle is no different from any other engine. Normally, the blood stream carries away and disposes of the muscle's waste products, but it cannot do this fast enough during periods of heavy work. Only when we're asleep, or resting, can the blood "clean house" effic-
