servation Authority - which is putting into effect one of the continent's greatest and most effective flood control and conservation schemes and, in the process, providing natural "breathing spaces" for an area housing nearly a tenth of Canada's population. The achievements of the Authority are described in the following article, together with its long-term plans for the future. The region shown includes the watersheds or drainage basins of nine streams and takes in twenty-three municipalities, including thirteen townships, six villages, three towns and Metropolitan Toronto.

In the map the shaded portions indicate conservation areas and the solid black areas show flood-plain lands. The tree symbols indicate Authority

The misery of a hot water heater that lets you down, just when you need it most, disappears overnight when you get the new "fast recovery" electric water heater. This new, two-element water heater has a 1000-watt bottom element which builds up a generous reserve of piping hot water. The 3000-watt top element takes over automatically to keep a plentiful supply of hot water "on tap" at times of heavy use. Ask us how you can enjoy this efficiency their claims - that dropping water tables, accelerated by man's destruction of trees and soil and other natural resources, would bring that result within a century. Hurricane Hazel, with its winds and floods, demonstrated that Ontarians, with their self-created loss of natural cover and protective agents, were placing themselves in danger from flood as well as from water shortage. Far-seeing men stepped into the picture and the work of conservation authorities was speeded up.
