BELL LINES
by Bill Barnes your telephone manager

You are looking at a new column for residents of this area. As you know, there are Bell people living in your community. Perhaps you know some of them personally. They may live next door or sit in church beside you. They are typical of the many people who work together as a team to bring you the best possible telephone service. We figure that the things that concern us at the Bell office concern you, or are of interest to you. So I'm going to do my best to bring you news items of general interest about your telephone service and about the people who make that service possible.

When anyone mentions the telephone company, a good many people immediately think of that young lady at the Bell office they spoke to the last time they called about their telephone service. She was a Service Representative—a key link between you and our company. It occurred to us that you might like to meet one of these charming young ladies. So we would like to introduce Mrs. Morrow. Anieta has spent a year and a half with our company and during that time she has undergone intensive training to enable her to deal with the 100 and one problems that come up during her working day. Like the other SRs, as we call them, she is there to look after your telephone needs and advise you. Maybe it's a new telephone, a move to a new address, something wrong with your account, or, perhaps, your listing in our telephone directory which you wish to discuss. Whatever it is, Anieta and her friends are equipped to help you. So please feel free to call these young ladies whenever telephone problems arise.

Modern busy housewives in Richmond Hill, like their sisters elsewhere, have many outside interests and still have to cope with a heavy schedule of work in the home. This means that the telephone comes in for a lot of use. And that is why an extension telephone in the kitchen, where the lady of the home spends most of her time, is so important. Not only will it save her many steps each day, but it will also save many a boiled-over pot. Extension phones are not expensive, and come in lovely colours that enhance the beauty of the home. Why not call our business office for more information about extensions in your home.
