"Don't Listen Ladies" Opens March 7

"Get out of my house" — Gerry Crack in the role of Daniel Bachelet orders his divorced wife, Valentine Bachelet, played by Margot Crack, to leave his home immediately, following a slight argument during one of the scenes of "Don't Listen Ladies".

Chaos and confusion, compounded of our most amusing foibles reign supreme in man's merry matrimonial chase — and this marital fact is exploited to the full in the Richmond Hill "Curtain Club" 1962 Festival entry, "Don't Listen Ladies" — a title deliberately designed to attract not only men but all the members of the other sex as well.

Dates of show: March 7, 8, 9, 10, 14, 15, 16, 17 — (with opening night being sponsored by the Rotary Club). Time: 8:30 p.m. Place: Curtain Club Theatre (Rear of 25 Yonge Street North).

The comedy, by Stephen Powys and Guy Bolton from the French of "Sacha Guitry" has the true French flavour — a little bit of spice, much humour.

Sex, of course, deserves a princely place in almost any comedy and in this one it is indeed given the due of Royalty.

"Don't Listen Ladies" is all about the romantic intrigues which surround the amorous adventures of an antique dealer, Daniel Bachelet (far from being antiquate himself). His problem results from having too many women; his present wife Madeline whom he mistakenly thinks has a lover and his ex-wife Valentine who is a somewhat silent partner in his antique business and who would — for all the obvious reasons and some of her own — like to become his wife again.

These two very determined women meet to discuss their mutual problem — Daniel, and they do so as only two women can discuss a man . . . when he isn't present! No holds barred.

Also the plot thickens much to our amusement as a packet of Daniel's old love-letters (unfortunately for Daniel — undated) turn up and give rise to much speculation on the part of the two warring wives — present and ex- — The plot thickens further and the humour increases a like amount when a former Toulouse-Lautrec model and actress, Julie Bille-En-Bois, enters to add to the intrigue. When she hears about Daniel's troubles she betrays her own sex, and introduces him to the strange and devious ways a woman's mind works.
