

On Monday night of last week the Irish Canadian Rugger Club lived up to their promise. An exhibition of rugger was given by the Irish Canadian team against a team picked from members of Ontario Rugger Union clubs. Despite the heat the game was a spirited affair with both sides going all out to win. It would be nice to be able to record the fact that the Irish Canadian team won the match. But it was not to be. The Rugger Union side came out on the long end of a 20-9 win.

For the benefit of the fine number of spectators who viewed the game, the Irish Canadians were equipped with a mobile public address system. Throughout the 60 minutes of fierce action a knowledgeable rugger commentator explained the various facets of the game as the action unfolded. Spectators came away knowing a lot more about the game than would otherwise have been the case.

In many respects the action is much similar to Canadian football. Kicking, running and tackling are a major part of the game but there is no such thing as set plays. One phase of the game that always mystified us was the scrum. Nine players from each side form two tight lines and the ball is thrown, amongst the forest of legs, into the centre. The idea is to work the ball out of the scrum to the halfbacks who are poised and ready to take off on the double. Once the ball is clear of the scrum and out to a fleet footed back the action gets furious.

If a ball carrier is tackled, he must immediately release his hold on the ball and someone else either picks it up or kicks it. All passes must be lateral passes and, as a team swings up the field to the attack, it is very reminiscent of the old extension end run. As no blocking of any kind is permitted the ball carrier is all on his own.

In rugger, what we call a touchdown, they call a "try". To score a try you must cross the opposing goal line and actually ground the ball. Just running across does not constitute a scoring play. If the opposing defenders can lift the ball carrier bodily and drop him back outside the line before he can ground the ball, then no score results. Maybe that's where the name "try" comes from - you have such a trying time to score at all. After the "try" is scored, then comes a kick from twenty five yards out to try and convert. Only one catch. The ball comes out parallel to the sidelines at the point where the "try" was scored. If you score in a corner then your conversion attempt is a sharply angled affair.

As for the game itself the action is fast enough and furious enough to be highly entertaining. Play can swing from one end of the field to the other in a matter of seconds. It's a game where the team that capitalizes on all the breaks has an excellent chance of winning.

Between halves the members of the Irish Canadian Club were signing up the youth of Richmond Hill for a series of rugger classes. Sixteen young hopefuls put their names on the dotted line to start playing the granddaddy of Canadian football. There will probably be many more before the regular rugger season gets under way in early October.

The arena snack bar area was made available to them. This was fine before the game started, it was the end that was literally a bit sticky. There was also a great deal of Richmond Richmond Hill Minor Ball Recults Hill dirt adhering to their once white hides. And so, hot, sticky, tired and dirty, they had to drive back to Toronto and home to get cleaned up.

The situation is far from a happy one and we hope that tenders are tendered with haste and accepted with alacrity. Then, oh happy day! we'll be able to look a visitor straight in the eye as we direct him to our public conveniences!
