Episode At The "Ex"

he would like very much to have that balloon."
She turned away from the booth, and was again surprised, to find the little fellow was travelling along beside her, his blonde head bobbing up and down as he hurried to keep up to her swinging step. The lady stopped in her tracks, bent over and asked, "Are you lost?"
Then the p.s. boy put one finger to his lips and whispered, "Shhh. 'Course I am. But don't tell anybody."
"Where is your mother", the lady asked and was nonplussed by her this small bit of humanity exclaiming disbelievingly, "Oh she's over in the food building. She won't miss me! She'll be there for hours . . . and I want to see the rest of the Ex."
"But your poor mother will worry about you. You really must go to the Lost Children's shelter, son", the good woman hastened to tell the lad.
At this the boy's faced screwed up and he clasped his small brown fists together and implored, "Ah, please. Don't turn me in."
There was no sign of a policeman, and the woman thought, "I'll find one outside the building. So taking the boy's small hand in hers she proceeded to stroll down the avenue in front of the twosome was one of Toronto's finest. Suddenly there was the sound of an indrawn breath beside her. The p.s. boy had seen the policeman too.
The woman felt a slight wrench, and realized the boy had escaped her handclasp . . . and she was alone. The diminutive-sized one had gone, disappeared, vanished. She waited around for several moments to see if the lad would return, and when he failed to appear she found the policeman too was out of sight, so she reluctantly went on to the flower show, feeling rather badly she had been unable to do somebody's mother a kind turn, by delivering the boy to safekeeping.
She was admiring the flowers and plants when she heard a small voice saying, "Here I am," and there he was again.
And there he stayed. For the next three hours. Whenever authority, in the guise of the law approached, the boy with an instinct for elusiveness, was gone like the wind. Each time the coast was clear, the young culprit reappeared, smiling, and bright as the proverbial bad penny.
Finally at 1 o'clock, the woman called for a truce. "Look", she said, "I'm going home now. But I'd feel a lot better if I knew you were back with your mother. I can't think why you would want to worry her like this." And this final appeal seemed to touch the boy's heart . . . or his stomach.

Ceremonies Mark Closing Program At Bible School

A special closing program on August 24 wound up a successful summer for the Langstaff Baptist Church daily vacation Bible school.
Total registration for the school was 188. Pupils donated $54.65 to buy a Union Jack, The Red Ensign, and the Christian Flag.
Theme for this year's session was "Patriots for Christ". During the closing program, put on entirely by the pupils, visitors viewed workbooks and crafts which the students were responsible for.
On August 25, a church family corn roast was held at the Dutch Oven, Master Feeds Farm.

Don't Get Tough' Says Chipmunk To Garter Snake

The lowly chipmunk is a lot tougher animal than most people give it credit for being.
S. R. Hamilton, timber supervisor for the Lake Simcoe District, recounted a rather unusual incident to "The Liberal" last week.
While walking along a bush road one morning during his vacation, he saw a small object thrashing around on the road in front of him.
He approached quietly and was amazed to see a chipmunk in the process of killing a garter snake.
It had a firm grip on the back of the snake's neck and was chewing and growling when disturbed by Mr. Hamilton, who was trying to get a closer look at him.
The chipmunk backed into the heavy undergrowth by the side of the road, dragging the snake with him.
Mr. Hamilton was a little startled by what he had seen and told officials at the Fish and Wildlife section of the Maple office.
They told him that snakes are natural enemies of the eastern chipmunk, especially because they often invade the chipmunk's nest to eat the young.
It is unlikely that the chipmunk had plans for eating the snake, but was probably protecting a nearby nest, Mr. Hamilton said.
