The meeting and similar ones at Woodbridge High School and Bayview Secondary School, had been organized by the York Central District High School Board to acquaint parents of grade 8 pupils with the various courses the area now offers its students. Mr. Hallman warned the parents, however, not to expect any magical difference in their children once they enter high school. As a general rule, the performance of any student in high school would be very similar to his or her performance in public school. Mr. Hallman felt that the four levers of achievement were ability, challenge, success and effort, and that these would determine the child's future. He advised parents to do four things in helping the child reach a decision about which course to take-to consider the child's interest, to ask the advice of the public school principal, to take advantage of the high school guidance services and to keep all doors open for the child, as he may change his

In Grade 9 the guidance programme consisted of group work, where the students will be helped to acquire good work and study habits. They will also be helped to get to know themselves, and a certain amount of testing will be done. Counselling will also be done on an individual basis, when the teacher will try to get to know the studever branch interests him ent's interests, his likes and dislikes.

The guidance department offers no formal group work in Grades 10 and 11, but in Grade 12 there is one period of guidance each week, when the students are helped to make decisions on their future. Mr. Anderson emphasized, however, that both students and parents should feel free to take advantage of the guidance department's services at any time.
