Hall Sees Diefenbaker Victory Another Minority Government

Close to 100 people attended the "Meet The Candidates" night sponsored by the Richmond Hill Junior Chamber of Commerce held in the Lions Hall on March 27.

The four York North candidates, John Addison, Liberal, Stan Hall, N.D.P., John O'Brien Social Credit, and Charles Hooper, Progressive Conservative were in fine fettle as they presented the policies and programmes of their respective parties.

First to address the meeting was John O'Brien, Social Credit, who maintained that there was something radically wrong in a country where millions of pounds of butter and countless thousands of tons of wheat were stored in government warehouses. Mr. O'Brien charged that past governments have failed to find a means of expanding money in such a way that would put purchasing power in the hands of the consumer.

It was his party's intent, he said, to gear the economic machinery of the country to meet the needs of the people and to stem a national debt which has assumed astronomical proportions. In the period of five years, he said, the national debt has increased to the point where it exceeds the entire money supply of the country. Mr. O'Brien referred to the financial policies of past governments as the "funny money" system and said that no Canadian at the present time has a dollar in his pocket that has not been borrowed by the government.

If the Social Credit party was afforded the opportunity of forming a government at Ottawa, Mr. O'Brien said, it would not only balance the nation's budget but it would also balance the nation's economy, an economy he said, that would have enough "zip" in it to permit all Canadian families to own electric refrigerators, stoves and the other amenities of life to which they were rightly entitled.

The Social Credit Party, Mr. O'Brien said, believes that every Canadian is entitled to the basic necessities of life whether they are employed or unemployed.

Diefenbaker Will Win
 Second speaker of the evening, Stan Hall, New Democratic Party, opened his address to the audience with the prediction, a prediction on which he was prepared to wager, that the Progressive Conservatives will win the April 8 election and that John Diefenbaker will again be the Prime Minister of Canada. Mr. Hall said that Canadians would have to contend with another minority government for the next one or two years and that voters should not allow themselves to be stampeded with claims of the necessity of a majority government because they were not going to get one. He claimed that the Progressive Conservative party had deteriorated to the point where it was nothing more than a prairie regional party and prophesied that Re- al Caouette would sweep the north in Quebec.

As far as the policies of his party were concerned, Mr. Hall said, they were based on the establishment of a planned economy of the type which has proven so successful in West Germany, Sweden, New Zealand and the United Kingdom. Under no circumstances, Mr. Hall said, would his party countenance the adoption of nuclear arms by Canada and should the day ever arrive when his party was called upon to form a government at Ottawa they would negotiate their way out of any prior commitments which required Canada to include nuclear arms among its arsenal.

Mr. Hall believes that Canada should continue to maintain a "conventional" defence force and that the country should allocate 2 per cent of its national income for the purpose of foreign aid to underprivileged countries as a means of helping to stem the root of wars and civil unrest.

Conservatives Hamstrung
 Charles Hooper who is making his first bid in federal politics as the Progressive Conservative candidate for York North rebuked the claim of opposition parties in the last House that the Conservatives did nothing during the last session of parliament. On the contrary, he said, it was the opposition who did nothing other than hamper the attempts of the Diefenbaker government to bring down legislation that would have benefited the country.

In making the statement Mr. Hooper produced a volume of 31 bills which the Conservative government attempted to introduce to the House in the last session, bills that were impeded and obstructed by the badgering tactics of the opposition parties because they were frightened of the constructive legislation that the bills contained. Mr. Hooper claimed that by such measures the opposition parties had proved that they were dedicated to placing politics before the country's good. In the matter of a budget, Mr. Hooper said, the Conservatives had been willing and prepared to bring in an early budget but here again had been hampered by the delaying strategy of the opposition parties.

Among the bills which the Conservatives had been prepared to bring before the House, Mr. Hooper said, was a bill dealing with the establishment of a National Economic Development Board, an Industrial Change and Manpower Bill and a Freight Rate Reduction Bill.

Minority Paralysis
 John Addison, Liberal, last of the candidates to address the meeting warned his audience that they should consider very carefully the possibility that if the next government elected to office was not a strong majority government, then the result could well mean the collapse of the country.

If a majority government were not elected, he said, there was a possibility that a Diefenbaker-Caouette alliance may result, and this, he contended, was one of the worst things that could happen to this country. Canada, he said, in the past few years had seen an example of government paralysis caused by minority government.

Mr. Addison recalled to his audience the financial chaos which this country has been confronted with during recent Conservative regimes, a financial crisis which befell us after being told by Mr. Diefenbaker that the country had never enjoyed more bountiful times. Within a short period of Mr. Diefenbaker's statements of economic stability and his return to office as Prime Minister it was necessary for this country to borrow $200,000,000 from the International Monetary Fund and the Bank of England to stem the country's sagging economy, he said.

Mr. Addison said that his party was pledged to the social reforms that the country needed but he said the fact must not be lost sight of that such reforms will cost money. Social reforms, Mr. Addison said, could not be accomplished overnight. It was the intention of the Liberal party, Mr. Addison said, that if elected, parliament would be convened by May 16 and that unparalleled legislation would be transacted in the House in the first 60 days of the session. Within four years, Mr. Addison said, his party was pledged to the establishment of 1,000,000 new jobs for Canadians.
