28,000 At Boyd In Heat Wave
 Nearly 28,000 people took advantage of Boyd Conservation Park's sprawling acres and lake in the sizzling temperatures last week.
 Metro and Toronto Regional Conservation Authority's office reported Sunday's attendance at the park was 8,400. There are 400 of the 1,000 acres in the area developed, which has a heavy use because of its proximity to Toronto.
 Attendance at the eight conservation areas surrounding Metro is just 100,000 short, half way through this summer, of last year's total attendance of 892,864.
 The first blast of dynamite was set off Tuesday to make way for a reservoir at Claireville where another area will be developed near Highways 7 and 27.
 Within 10 years, it is expected, a large artificial lake will be created at Boyd to accommodate more swimmers.

Water Those Trees
 Everywhere you look these days, in cities, towns or in the country, property owners are watering their lawns in an effort to keep them looking green and healthy. If not watered, the hot summer sun can often turn lush grass into dry, coarse stubble.
 Trees also require moisture and prolonged dry spells during spring, summer and fall, can, and often do, result in reduced tree vigour. When transportation from the leaf surface is in excess of the amount of moisture taken in by the roots, leaves begin to dry up and wilt. Small feeding roots can also dry up and die, resulting in a decrease in the rooting capacity of the tree. This increases the drying out problem since fewer roots are available to take in water.
 Just as people, when they become rundown and tired are likely to be more susceptible to sickness or disease, so it is with trees. Trees in a weakened condition are quite susceptible to disease and insect attacks. Although the resulting disease or insects do the major damage, they are not too often the initial cause of the trouble. Zone Forester John Simpson at Maple, stated that while not a cure-all, the watering of trees and shrubs can go a long way in helping to keep them in a healthy state. As with lawns and gardens, it is advisable to apply water during the evening which avoids large quantities of moisture being evaporated by the hot sun.
 In order to help retain much of the moisture either from an artificial or natural source, a mulch should be placed around the base of the tree. Straw or grass clippings can be used for this purpose. Mr. Simpson pointed out that mulching is usually restricted to small trees and shrubs.

No Federal Tax On The Libraries
 The announcement this week that public libraries as well as school and university buildings will be exempt from the controversial 11 per cent federal sales tax on building materials, will be received by those library boards contemplating building and with building programmes under way with much pleasure.
 Richmond Hill, with its adequate facilities housed in its beautiful new building would not be affected by the tax in the foreseeable future, but Chief Librarian Fred Israel commented that every taxpayer should receive the news with pleasure, for the federal tax would certainly affect their pocketbooks.
