Vaughan Township

Library Space Shortage Discussed In September

Nearly 1,400 adults and children from Vaughan are using Richmond Hill's library at practically no charge.

Why?

Some people in Vaughan feel the library facilities in their township are inadequate to serve the 17,000 population.

Richmond Hill Librarian Fred Israel who provides the service for the "outsiders" said he is happy to do so but costs have risen in the past few years and another look must be given to the rather unique situation.

He has asked Vaughan School Board and Council for a September meeting to dig into the problem and see what solution could be arrived at, either by remuneration to Richmond Hill or the possible formation of a union school library region with one central library to serve the townships of Vaughan and Markham and the Town of Richmond Hill.

He said any attempt to form a York county library region was out of the question at the moment. "The northern municipalities are against it. And by legislation, it would have to be formed of the three counties of York, Peel and Ontario and that would be far too big."

Vaughan adults pay $2 a year, high school students 50 cents and for the majority of the total, about 700 elementary school students, the service is free. "It is costing the Hill taxpayer just over a mill library levy this year."

On an average $5,000 to $5,500 assessment, this would mean between $5 and $5.50 a family to use the library, $3 more than a Vaughan resident who is taking advantage of identical service is paying.

Mr. Israel said a union area was quite feasible and could be organized along the lines of the area school board but with specific areas. In other words, the entire municipalities and town. "It is readily recognizable identical units are far too expensive to run and it's economically impossible to continue to do so."

"If we formed a union, ideal solution at first would be bookmobiles travelling to the various areas before we ever thought of any major construction. They would get the books to the people who want them and from that in future, library sites could be decided," the librarian said.

Vaughan School Inspector D. R. MacDonald said the meeting had been called by the board after receiving comments from Richmond Hill.

"This will be purely a preliminary look into the overall picture, a joint discussion between existing library boards in Maple, Thornhill and Kleinburg with the board and council," he said.

He said the school board was interested in a library service throughout Vaughan and a survey may possibly be done to determine the needs. No date has been set for the meeting.

There are two publically supported libraries in Vaughan.

Maple's library which was started about eight years ago with the loan of 200 books from the Toronto library system and opened for business in the community hall is now occupying a store building in central Maple.

In 1935, the library moved to Thornhill Public School's board room with the trustees footing the overhead bills and volunteers manning the service. In 1945, according to a clipping there were more than 1,700 excellent volumes on hand and in 1944, 2,500 books were in circulation with 1,300 taken out by children.

It became a public library in 1950-1951 and has been located in an old but adequate house on Colbourne St. for the past three years.

Librarian Jane McLaren is in charge and is aided by volunteers. The library is financed by a grant of $925 from the Ontario Department of Education, a $2,500 levy from residents of the police village and fees and fines as well as contributions from service clubs.

Hours are about 12 a week, two evenings, two mornings and one afternoon.

Last year, Miss McLaren added 450 new books to bring the shelf total to about 6,000 volumes of fiction, non-fiction and children's books.

"Wider library areas would be better to process," Miss McLaren commented on the proposed Vaughan meeting.

"For example, one central area could buy five copies of the same book probably at a saving. One area would cut down on purchasing and processing, too, but such a system must be of advantage to the library and to the residents or it's of no value."

Thornhill is administered by a nine-man board including two Village trustees, two Vaughan representatives, two from the separate school board and two from the Markham school board as well as the Police Village chairman.

The Kleinburg Library which last week received a $100 grant from Vaughan Council is a privately-operated library.

Library Space Shortage Discussed In September

Nearly 1,400 adults and children from Vaughan are using Richmond Hill's library at practically no charge.

Why?

Some people in Vaughan feel the library facilities in their township are inadequate to serve the 17,000 population.

Richmond Hill Librarian Fred Israel who provides the service for the "outsiders" said he is happy to do so but costs have risen in the past few years and another look must be given to the rather unique situation.

He has asked Vaughan School Board and Council for a September meeting to dig into the problem and see what solution could be arrived at, either by remuneration to Richmond Hill or the possible formation of a union school library region with one central library to serve the townships of Vaughan and Markham and the Town of Richmond Hill.

He said any attempt to form a York county library region was out of the question at the moment. "The northern municipalities are against it. And by legislation, it would have to be formed of the three counties of York, Peel and Ontario and that would be far too big."

Vaughan adults pay $2 a year, high school students 50 cents and for the majority of the total, about 700 elementary school students, the service is free. "It is costing the Hill taxpayer just over a mill library levy this year."

On an average $5,000 to $5,500 assessment, this would mean between $5 and $5.50 a family to use the library, $3 more than a Vaughan resident who is taking advantage of identical service is paying.

Mr. Israel said a union area was quite feasible and could be organized along the lines of the area school board but with specific areas. In other words, the entire municipalities and town. "It is readily recognizable identical units are far too expensive to run and it's economically impossible to continue to do so."

"If we formed a union, ideal solution at first would be bookmobiles travelling to the various areas before we ever thought of any major construction. They would get the books to the people who want them and from that in future, library sites could be decided," the librarian said.

Vaughan School Inspector D. R. MacDonald said the meeting had been called by the board after receiving comments from Richmond Hill.

"This will be purely a preliminary look into the overall picture, a joint discussion between existing library boards in Maple, Thornhill and Kleinburg with the board and council," he said.

He said the school board was interested in a library service throughout Vaughan and a survey may possibly be done to determine the needs. No date has been set for the meeting.

There are two publically supported libraries in Vaughan.

Maple's library which was started about eight years ago with the loan of 200 books from the Toronto library system and opened for business in the community hall is now occupying a store building in central Maple.

In 1935, the library moved to Thornhill Public School's board room with the trustees footing the overhead bills and volunteers manning the service. In 1945, according to a clipping there were more than 1,700 excellent volumes on hand and in 1944, 2,500 books were in circulation with 1,300 taken out by children.

It became a public library in 1950-1951 and has been located in an old but adequate house on Colbourne St. for the past three years.

Librarian Jane McLaren is in charge and is aided by volunteers. The library is financed by a grant of $925 from the Ontario Department of Education, a $2,500 levy from residents of the police village and fees and fines as well as contributions from service clubs.

Hours are about 12 a week, two evenings, two mornings and one afternoon.

Last year, Miss McLaren added 450 new books to bring the shelf total to about 6,000 volumes of fiction, non-fiction and children's books.

"Wider library areas would be better to process," Miss McLaren commented on the proposed Vaughan meeting.

"For example, one central area could buy five copies of the same book probably at a saving. One area would cut down on purchasing and processing, too, but such a system must be of advantage to the library and to the residents or it's of no value."

Thornhill is administered by a nine-man board including two Village trustees, two Vaughan representatives, two from the separate school board and two from the Markham school board as well as the Police Village chairman.

The Kleinburg Library which last week received a $100 grant from Vaughan Council is a privately-operated library.
