And Early November

to the restaurant for something to eat and perhaps a cup of coffee.
Headlights from cars splash bright patterns on the grassy pavement. The grounds of the town park surrender to the shadows. Earlier in the day the park had been a good place to take a stroll. The weather had been mild, the sun bright, a perfect autumn.

The sluggish movements of the fly clinging desperately to the inside portion of the screen catches the watcher's eye. It moves to take a swat at it but changes his mind. All summer he has been attacking flies. But now he's in a philosophical mood. If this fly has been shrewd enough to evade him until now, well, give it credit for that much.

It'll have trouble enough getting through the winter. Outside again the darkness is settling around in deadly earnest. The trees are fading spikes of blackness against a fast-fading sky. The weatherman is forecasting colder, more seasonable temperatures. It won't be long now. Tomorrow he'll definitely have to get after the rest of those storm-windows.

Nature Notes
BY RICHMOND HILL NATURALISTS

During the past few years, this number will double in the next two to five years. The features of the Richmond Hill Naturalists' Club has been members' night when one or two junior members outline their summer activities, usually in the research field. Friday evening, October 18, was no exception. The club was treated to short talks by two keen young naturalists - John Morrow and Rolph Davis who have both been engaged in interesting summer work and at the same time been very observant of their natural surroundings. According to John Morrow, "The past two summers have been the most interesting of my whole life". During the summer months of 1962 he was employed by the research branch of the Department of Lands and Forests to study the red spruce around Swan Lake in Algonquin Park. An accurate tree census was taken in carefully defined plots and the findings related from plot to plot, particular attention being paid to the red spruce, core samples and other measurements made. John's observation was that red spruce could be used successfully for pulpwood but doesn't grow in sufficient quantities. Then, in 1963, John travelled "straight up Yonge Street about 460 miles to Cochrane" where he was engaged in the study of water levels in relation to black spruce. John described how drainage ditches were opened by dynamiting and showed photographs of the success of this method of ditching, with water flowing freely in the ditches. Work was also done on the study of ground cover by alder to see whether or not it is beneficial as a second growth. From there he was fortunate to be able to journey to Moose River Crossing to view the eclipse where there was 87 seconds of totality, during which time he saw "the most beautiful sunset ever". During the brief darkness, John reports that it got quite cold, birds were silent (perhaps asleep) but came to life when the sun reappeared. ****
Rolph Davis, as "Information" spent his past summer at Quetico Provincial Park, the second-largest provincial park in Ontario, containing about a million acres, situated on the border of Ontario and Minnesota. The country is fairly flat, making travel in the park quite easy and, according to Rolph, "the best canoe country in the world." He estimated 80,000 visitors to the park the year before last and believes * Township council decided to take no action on an application by R. V. Frastacky to establish a private shooting range on Lot 7 of Concession 5, Markham has a by-law forbidding fire-arms to be discharged and councillors felt making an exception in this case could lead to difficulty in the future. AURORA: Work on the new Yonge Street entrance to the Aurora shopping plaza will start immediately, according to William Fairchild, president of the mercants' association.
