Psychopath Is
Centre Of Plot

Murder, mystery and suspense combine to make the Curtain Club's production of Agatha Christie's "Ten Little Indians" an excellent evening of entertainment. This current production of the local little theatre group is directed by Dagmar Matyas, and is her first directing chore in Richmond Hill. She has produced a play, which after a rather slow first act keeps the audience on the edge of their seats.

Plot of the "Ten Little Indians" centres around a psychopath who undertakes to take the lives of ten people he charges with the taking of other lives. Each retaliatory death follows the lines of the nursery rhyme.

The group of ten ill-assembled characters play their roles in an excellent stage setting of a summer home on Indian Island off the coast of Devon, England.

The visual presentation is most excellent, particularly with such a large cast having to be accommodated on the relatively small stage of the miniature theatre. Character interpretation, timing, lighting and attention to detail bring the usual Curtain Club's high standards to this production.

So that the pleasure of mystery fans will not be marred by revealing the startling denouement of the plot, this review of the play is being kept brief. If you want to know how it comes out, you will have to see it for yourself. M. D.

Tomorrow's Need

Good Basic Education
Foundation For Skills

One hundred parents were in attendance at Crosby Heights School November 19, at the first of two meetings sponsored by the combined Richmond Hill home and school associations on the theme, "The World of Work Is Changing". Three speakers, speaking on the subject, "Today's Education for Tomorrow", challenged parents as well as the educational system to keep children in school and train them to take and retain their place in the world of work of tomorrow.

Mr. A. Gamble, assistant superintendent of secondary education for the Ontario Department of Education, stated that the major challenge of education today is to prepare youth for life after they leave the classrooms. "Many are unprepared to meet even the minimum requirements of employers," he stated, pointing out that the trend is toward a great decrease in the number of unskilled and semi-skilled jobs. He outlined in some detail the measures his department have taken to prepare the young people for the world of tomorrow by providing more vocational and technical schools, and retraining for adults whose jobs are threatened by automation. "One of the saddest tales of the present day," he claimed, "is the large number in the 16 to 19 age group who have no saleable skills and are practically unemployable." He forecast that in future years percentages of secondary school leavers will settle down to 40 percent in arts and science, 30 percent in business and commerce and 30 percent in technical and trades.

He warned his listeners that all these courses will not achieve the purpose for which they were designed if parents feel they would be wonderful for somebody else's child, but not for their own, and insist on their child taking a course for which he is not fitted and in which he is not interested. This can only result in failure, drop out and unemployment, he cautioned.

The second speaker was Mr.

R. B. Beggs, manager of education for International Business Machines, in charge of training employees and customers in use of their machines and methods. He spoke of the increasing impact of automation on our society, and stressed that in 15 years 55 percent of jobs available will be entirely new jobs. "These changes will happen with such rapidity they will be very difficult to meet with a formalized education," he cautioned, stating that the main emphasis in the educational system should be the imparting of a good basic education, leaving the teaching of particular vocational skills to the area which can handle it best, business itself. Since such company sponsored programmes usually extend over a period of weeks rather than years, he claimed that they are more responsive to changing conditions. Their success, however, is predicated on people coming into the programme with the ability to read, write, think, talk, and know where they are and where they are going.

Pointing out that employees of his company with 15 or 20 years service are still taking courses in many subjects which are quite new and quite advanced, he forecast more emphasis will be placed on such training by business.

"Our young people have to stay in school longer and have to have more education," was his claim. "Unemployment is not the main problem of our society but rather a symptom. The real problem is education," he concluded.

Third and final speaker was Superintendent Gordon McIntyre of the local public school system, who summed up the other two speeches and related findings to the elementary school system. His conclusions were that children in elementary schools must be taught to think, to make decisions, and be able to communicate with other people. Earlier recognition and encouragement of talents will be necessary. Parents must be wise in application of pressure on their children, and young people must leave school with the basic education which will enable them to adapt to changing conditions.

"It is assumed the schools will play a major part in the development of our society," he stated, pointing out that compulsory education for every child is a very recent idea, only 200 years old, and society already looks to it to solve its problems. He felt that the time is coming when we will have to decide between education and the conventional measures of national defence. "I doubt if we can afford both," he stated.

He concluded with "Education for the world of work of tomorrow is a venture on which the highest stakes have been placed and we travel a road as uncharted as outer space."

Cyril Bell in thanking the speakers and the home and school council which arranged the meeting, expressed the gratitude of the parents present who are "all very interested in the problem of greatest concern to all thinking parents today - what happens to those displaced by automation."

Mr. Doug Hitchins representing McConaghy Home and School Association was the chairman of the committee which arranged the programme. He was assisted by Mr. Allan McKim of MacKillop Home and School, Mr. Peter Townsend of Pleasantville Home and School, and Mr. John McGill of Crosby Heights School. The latter introduced the three speakers.

In a most effective opening ceremony a colour party from 6th Richmond Hill Boy Scouts, led by Piper Allan McKim, paraded down the centre aisle and placed their colours in holders on the platform.

The second program on the same theme will concentrate on "Education for Leisure" and will be held at MacKillop School Tuesday evening, March 10.

At the conclusion of the meeting Mr. Len Pugh spoke briefly asking public support for the canvass for funds to erect an indoor swimming pool in Richmond Hill.

Richmond Hill
Churches Honour
Late President

Requiem high mass was sung at Our Lady Queen of the World Church at 8 p.m. Monday evening for the repose of the soul of President John F. Kennedy of the United States, and for the spiritual and temporal welfare of his family.

Highlights of Father Robinson's sermon stressed that the late president had been a family man who cared first of all for his children and then for his work. This was evidenced in his trip to the bedside of the dying Patrick Bouvier Kennedy. His children also mingled with diplomats, heads of state and newsmen during his life.

The president was dedicated to his work. He strove hard to become president and once elected never slackened the pace to bring peace and harmony to the whole world. Father Robinson continued. He also pointed out that John F. Kennedy was courageous and brave in the light of the Cuban situation, standing up to Russia, in the face of world-wide danger.

Bells in the church tower tolled from 7:30 to 8:30 p.m. to remind all that death is for all.

At St. Mary Immaculate Church, Saturday morning, Rev. J. Markle, assistant priest, celebrated requiem low mass for the repose of the soul of the assassinated president. This service was attended by the Young People's Club of Lawrence Park Community Church, Bayview Avenue.

Monday morning, Rev. F. McGinn, pastor of St. Mary's celebrated requiem high mass for the day of burial.
