As we grow older we realize that everyone has feet of clay (ours too) and that white knights are fancy fairy tales or television advertisement material. We also realize too that white knights have mortgages, car payments and all the other necessities of modern living. Who can blame Sir Galahad for a bit of compromise to buy oats for his milk-white steed??

About the only way in which officials of NHL games would be free from top brass pressures would be to have them NOT work for the NHL. Supply referees for professional games from professional referees' association which would be entirely separate from the NHL, AHL, EPHL or any other professional league. Give the referees a strong enough association that external pressures would be virtually impossible and then officiating would be absolutely fair and unbiased. Charges such as those levied in the past few weeks just couldn't be made. If any pressure was attempted the official would then feel free to report it immediately and appropriate action taken at the time of the incident—not three to nine years later as has recently happened.

A man has to have a lot of courage to take a job as an NHL referee under the present set-up. He has to please a crowd of up to 14 or 15,000 fans, control a whole herd of panting athletes, please the NHL governors and not incur the displeasure of the referee-in-chief nor the displeasure of the league president. His calls are subject to criticism in the press (after the fact) while motion pictures can be studied at leisure after the game. The referee has had a fraction of a second to see the play from one angle, mentally review a complicated set of rules, blow a whistle to stop play and decide what punishment will fit the crime. And all this without worrying about external pressures which may or may not be operating on his judgment processes. Anybody want the job??

Both groups have problems. Team owners (NHL governors) have to produce a crowd-pleasing game and thus produce a lucrative product. Game officials have a tough job and, it would seem, sometimes have to compromise their principles just a little bit. Actually they're both after the same thing because if the NHL does not make money, then the linesmen, referees, etc., won't be paid. And if that isn't a vicious circle, then show us one that is!!

Just to keep the Senators company last week the Pirates, Red Legs, Red Sox and Orioles all managed to grab off the full complement of seven points. A little success seems to rub off all over! As the Senators have already won the initial series they're really not in contention for this one. The Tigers are in second place with 25 points while the Pirates and Giants own 24 each. The Orioles decided to make it tight for all concerned and now have 23 points going for them. Interesting series isn't it???

A comparative newcomer to the league, Jean Vella showed the old establishment how it should be done. Jean set a wicked 910 pace backed up by a 349 single to show everyone the way home. Ethel McRae finished with 737 (245), Dot Webster 692 (244), Agnes Bregg 670 (247) and Phyllis Anderson 634 (264).

John O'Connor topped the male side of the house at 817 (311). Les Chidley was close behind with 814 (301) followed by Bill Jones 796 (299), Larry Long 759 (263) and Ken Bregg 682 (275).

Helen Robertson rolled a single of 288, Janet Fleming 252, Marg Field 250, Ev Jones 240, Shirley Thompson 235, Linda Doyle 224, Muriel Steven 218, Rita Beland 217, Ruth Proctor 208, Joan Standford 203 and Lillian Mayor an even 200.
