Centennial Tree Planting Project Underway In Ont.

Several hundred grade 7 and 10 students last week took part in Centennial reforestation projects in the Counties of Peel, York, Ontario, Dufferin and Simcoe, under the auspices of the Department of Lands and Forests.

Farm Forester R. N. Staley of Maple states that over 4,000 children will plant between 70,000 and 80,000 trees this fall as part of a three year program. In each area, timber species such as red pine, white pine and white spruce will be planted, along with several other varieties. The planting will help in the yield of forest products in the future and will soon improve the environment for wildlife, conserve soil and water and give recreational enjoyment. This better land use will result in additional benefits to the local community and to the country as a whole. Perhaps even more important emphasizes Mr. Staley, the young people will become a little better acquainted with their own natural resources and will be involved in a worthwhile project aimed at improving these resources.

Rambling Around

(1) A temporary wardship is limited to two years. After that the child must be restored to his parents or guardian if they have a suitable home and good conditions for the child's welfare; if not the child may become a permanent ward. (2) A permanent ward. A permanent ward becomes the child of the CAS and the parent loses him permanently. He becomes available for adoption. (3) A non-ward. This results from a temporary situation where relatives are to be traced, or in cases where one or both parents need time to get on their feet after a temporary setback. These are cases of misfortune rather than neglect.

The CAS operates children's receiving homes, and there are charitable institutions for temporary care, but the orphanage is a thing of the past, and under normal conditions the society makes an effort to place a child immediately in a foster home.

Foster Homes

The CAS is always in need of foster parents who can care for children in a normal family setting. Couples interested should get in touch with the CAS head office of the branch in their area. In York County, it would be The Children's Aid Society located in the county buildings, Newmarket.

The CAS pays from $40 to $60 a month for normal care depending on the individual child. In addition all clothing, medical care and special needs of the child are provided by the CAS.

In special cases, where extra attention is needed, as in the case of a frail infant, payment may be higher. The CAS insists that the foster parents be married couples who should be able to provide a bed for each child.

Infant boarding homes must be registered and approved by the local or county health department.

An interview is arranged before a child is placed. Foster parents or the CAS are free to end the arrangement at any time.

Group Homes

There are many older children who do not fit into the intimate family setting of a boarding home. Many have been shifted from one home to another all their lives and find it difficult to achieve any kind of warm relationship with ever changing foster parents. The CAS feels they should be among other children with similar backgrounds, but wants to avoid placing them in an institution. One solution is the group home. This is where a couple with enough space will take in a group of six, usually older children. The CAS is also seeking group homes for children who require special care.

Adoption

About 90 per cent of all adoptions are handled by CAS. The remainder are arranged privately through lawyers and doctors and most of these are children related to the adoptive parents. But the CAS is brought into the picture on all adoptions handled in the province. As the provincial government's agent, its job is to recommend to the court in favor or against each adoption before it becomes final.

The Department of Public Welfare acts as a clearing house in adoption cases for the 55 Children's Aid Societies. This is particularly useful in the adoption of hard-to-place children, those who are older, racially mixed or handicapped.

If you want to adopt a child, the best way to get things rolling is to get in touch with your Children's Aid Society. The Protestant CAS is forbidden by law to place a child in a Roman Catholic home. Jewish parents may apply to the Protestant CAS. There is no religious barrier there. Roman Catholic prospective parents should work through the Roman Catholic CAS in three cities, Toronto, Hamilton and Windsor. Anywhere else, one should apply in the area of residence.

Religious barriers mean little in private adoptions. It is up to the father, or if he is not known or available, the mother, to decide the religion of the child. If responsible parents consent to cross religious lines and the adoptive parents agree, there is no legal barrier. To arrange a private adoption, the natural parent should get in touch with a lawyer who will look after the details.

The lawyer may charge a fee for his services, but it is against the law for anyone to accept or make any kind of payment for the exchange of a child.

In adoptions through the CAS, after making the initial appointment, prospective parents may have to wait six to twelve months for a child. The child is then on probation "at home" for six months, after which the adoption may become final.

There are no hard and fast rules about age or income limits on adoptive parents.

The first adoption of a child was made final in Ontario in 1921, and today's adoption program is very different. Adoption is now widely accepted and recognized as the best form of substitute care for children permanently separated from their parents, who can adjust to normal living. Consequently adoption has become so much a part of the culture that the press and TV now regularly carry adoption arrangements. It is a well known fact that many adopted children have grown into some of our most useful and prominent citizens.

(The final column on this subject of The Young will be on The Unmarried Mother and The Child. All material for this subject from the Ontario Department of Welfare.)
