WRIGHT STREET
Wright Street between Yonge and Hall Street provides an existing pavement width of about 40 feet near Yonge to about 18 feet at Hall Street.

This 40-foot width of pavement, the report says, provides sufficient room for turning and parking manoeuvres at the municipal offices, fire hall, library, and the Canadian Tire Store.

"The 18 foot width of pavement in front of the high school is, however, definitely inadequate and the traffic congestions are very common when vehicles are turning into the school property or unloading passengers."

Curtain Club's Play "The Egg"

Best Of Season's Productions

By MARGARET McLEAN

A tour de force and a triumph are the words that come first to mind in discussing the Curtain Club's current attraction, "The Egg".

It is to be hoped however, that before any more performances, someone will take down the gauze curtain and either iron the wrinkles out of it or stretch it taut and smooth.

None of the other 31 roles in the play approached that of Emile in either length or depth, but many members of the cast played two or three roles and are to be complimented on the fact that this was for the most part, only clear by a careful study of the program.

Ron Solloway, for instance, appeared successively as a doctor much sicker than his patient, a speechless customer, the fiancé of one of the sisters of Emile's wife and as the wife's lover. In this latter role, he successfully portrayed a timid lover who eventually becomes completely frustrated as Emile's machinations lead to his being accused of murder.

One of the few who played a single role was Anita Stainer and she shone in the comparatively small part as Rose, a blase and matter-of-fact prostitute.

The play takes place in Paris and in it Emile relates the story of his attempts to be accepted, to become part of the system, to enter "The Egg" where the rest of society appears to be warmly embraced, leaving him on the outside. While his methods of doing this are outrageous and culminate in his engineering the arrest and presumable conviction of his wife's lover for her murder (which Emile had himself committed) it is surely a tribute to Mr. Owen's sympathetic to him throughout.

A further tribute must be paid to Mr. Owen as the designer of the unique and effective sets for the play. The stage is bisected at an angle from right to left by a gauze screen. With the light on this, the back of the stage is rendered invisible while Emile relates his story directly to the audience. The rear portion of the stage is also divided in two parts and with the drawing back of the black curtain on either side and having the section lit up, the action was quite visible there through the gauze screen. This permitted a quick transition from Emile's place of business to his home as he casually drew the black curtain across either the one or the other, meanwhile speaking directly to the audience.

For a triumph it was, for the club and more especially for Kingsley Owen who carried off the extremely demanding role of Emile, the principal character, with complete aplomb. On stage throughout the entire two and a half hours of the production, Mr. Owen also performed the difficult feat of talking directly to the audience for much of the evening, without becoming coy, giving the audience a fine sense of involvement and participation. The bit of business for instance where he stopped the action to ask the house manager for a drink of water seemed perfectly natural and the audience was quite in sympathy with his comment "You'd get thirsty too!"

The only point on which it was possible to fault Mr. Owen's performance in any way was in the quality of his voice which, when he raised it, sounded somewhat strained and thin.
