Caribbean Visitors Impressed By Beauty, Poverty

BY LOUISE COOPER

Several residents of the Maple area recently returned from a beautiful cruise in the Caribbean. Among those who went along with a group Mrs. Janet Keffer, Mrs. Marall from our community.

Although some were neryous about flying, they boarded a jet at Malton and flew to New York, where they were to take the boat for the cruise. The flight, to Mr. Puterbaugh at least, was the most enjoyable part of vous about the flying, but didn't realize that the plane was even in the air until looking out, saw clouds.

On January 20, they began their tours of the islands, with a trip around San Juan, which is the capital of Puerto Rico. The next day began bright and early for a tour of Caracas. Venezuela, landing at LaGuaira. The folks were most impressed by the many tiny shacks or small houses on the hillsides, where the people were obviously very the children must go to school until 16 years of age, and receive free education, also that the population of the city of Caracas was 2,000,000. They had been warned that casual dress was not acceptable, particularly at the memorials and national monuments, which they were shown. The group was taken to the "LaRinconada" race course, and back to La-Guaira, which is the principal Port of Venezuela, where the population is around 50,000 and the soil a reddish brown. It is interesting at this point to note that the agenda listed by the tour company goes into great detail of the shopping centres and multimillion dollar water distillation plants, and statues etc. that are featured on the tour, but the folk seemed most impressed by the thin. poor looking sheep and goats, and the wasteland and stones.

The next day was again spent aboard ship, resting and attending church services, as well as a talk on Haiti which was the stop for the next day.

It is quite noticeable that on the days when tours are planned, everyone was up and out to an early breakfast at any time between 7 and 8 in the morning.

At Haiti, the "Empress" was not able to approach the shallow harbour at Port-Au-Prince, and so was docked some distance out in the water. The first greeting the tour had was from natives who were surrounding the boat in anything that would float to advertise their wares and handcrafts, and for the children and young people to dive into the water for coins that were thrown by the passengers.

This was an advance notice again of the poverty on the islands, and the passengers were warned not to give coins to natives when they were ashore, as they were likely to be mobbed when word got around.

Once ashore, they were taken in cars around the island. They were taken up on a mountain top, some 3500 feet above sea level, where they could see their group visited a Roman Cath- away, looking like a tiny again.

The group was shown the beginnings of a cock fight, until the money came out and the cocks were separated, once the men had received a coin.

It was most unfortunate during the next two days that several folk came down with a 'flu bug and could not enjoy the return trip into New York Harbour.

After going through customs etc, they were taken directly to the airport, where they had a light lunch, while waiting for their plane to depart. Although the captain warned that there might be turbulence, the trip home was smooth and comfortable. They were met by friends at the airport who told them how fortunate they had been to be enjoying such warm temperatures, when we were shivering with below zero weather for most of the time they had been away.
