

York - Peel Reassessment, Federal - Provincial Negotiations Keys To Ontario Tax Reform

taxpayer refunds — would compensate our poorest families for the property, sales and other taxes they are obliged to pay despite their lack of income. This proposal would provide genuine assistance for 2,000,000 to 2,500,000 people who receive no benefits at all from the federal proposals.

"Our low-income allowance is a selective measure that would eliminate present income taxes for those in the lowest income brackets. They would also provide gradually tapering tax reductions for others with below average incomes," said the Ontario Economics Minister.

"I will not go into details on our suggested provisions for employment expenses, tax credits for working mothers, and other recommendations, except to say that all of these are aimed at providing positive relief to those who require it most.

"We also recommended a savings incentive for ordinary taxpayers, and a more humane and flexible approach to financial transfers for divorced and separated couples.

"You will also be aware, I believe, that Ontario's proposals are designed to create an incentive society in Canada — a tax system that would encourage initiative, enterprise and economic growth in this country.

"We proposed a more reasonable capital gains tax, incentives for new and growing businesses, and opposed the highly complex integration package in corporations tax that discriminates between closely-held and widely-held companies.

"We recommend a modified dividend tax credit that would serve more as an incentive to Canadian ownership, with proportionately higher benefits to low and middle-income taxpayers," said Mr. MacNaughton.

"While our Ontario proposals haven't received explicit acceptance from the Parliamentary committees studying tax reform, we have been pleased to note that the House of Commons Committee report moves in the direction of our reform plan.

"It proposes:

- Half taxation of capital gains, parallel reduction in death taxes, and liberal treatment of homes, farms and personal property:

- Reduction in the income tax rate schedule for middle income groups and retention of a top personal rate above 50%;
- Scrapping of the complex distinctions between widely-held and closely-held corporations;
- Taxation of strike pay;
- Realistic treatment of legitimate business expenses;
- Retention of effective incentives for small business and for the natural resource industries.

"I am pleased, too, that Mr. Benson has agreed to undertake further discussions with provincial governments before proceeding with legislation in the House of Commons.

"I am hopeful that we can develop a more comprehensive system than has been proposed at the federal level, even though we haven't received much encouragement to date," said Mr. MacNaughton.

"I frankly believe that, if all levels of government can work together in a co-operative spirit, if the Federal Government will recognize the growing importance of provincial and municipal governments, there is no limit to the progress and success we can achieve as a nation.

"I can assure you tonight that Ontario will continue to play an active, positive and constructive role in the continuing process toward tax reform," said Mr. MacNaughton in his November 4 speech.

Education Minister Davis was the first speaker introduced by Willowdale M.L.A. Bales.

Mr. Davis said that on the basis of the amount spent per student in Ontario, our cost of education is substantially lower than in adjacent provinces and states.

He said Ontario education costs aren't out of line with comparable jurisdictions.

Mr. Davis said the provincial share of local school board costs is now 51% and will be going to 60% in two more years.

He noted that in the past the Department of Education set an upper limit on the amount of school board spending it would share. The local boards could go over this limit if they paid the whole of the extra amount themselves.

Now the department has given the local board two years to get their budgets within the limit set.

Mr. Davis said:

The Education Minister said there were going to have to be some very hard decisions made by government and public if education costs are going to be kept under control.

He said operation of secondary schools 12 months a year will have to be considered.

The setting of entrance requirements for institutions of higher education will have to be considered, even though up to now no student that qualified and wanted to attend, went without some place in Ontario where he could get a university education, he said.

Municipal Affairs Minister McKeough said the government had three objectives in the field of municipal taxation.

The first is to reduce the burden and retrogressive nature of the property tax.

The second is to widen the tax base.

The third is to integrate the various levels of taxation.

He said there were two main constraints on the Provincial Government's program to reform taxation.

The first constraint, he said, is the unsettled situation created by the Federal Government White Paper on Taxation.

The second constraint is the fact that the property assessment base in Ontario municipalities is not in the kind of accurate state needed for the Provincial Government to be able to proceed to equitable tax reform.

Mr. McKeough said the provincial government has made a number of significant tax changes in recent years.

Close to $400,000 in costs have been transferred from the municipalities, and this amount has been collected instead in provincial taxes. This raised the amount of provincial grants to the municipalities from about $1 billion a year to $1 1/2 billion.

Items Mr. McKeough listed as being taken over by the province included $25,000,000 in justice administration costs, $20,000,000 in municipal assessment administration costs, and the share of education costs raised from 46% to 51%.

A North York comptroller asked Mr. McKeough what he thought about the idea of confining the property tax to land alone, instead of including buildings.

The North York municipal official noted that this type of land-only taxation was used in New Zealand and South Africa. There it had the effect of stopping land speculation and slum development, he said.

Mr. McKeough said he was familiar with this idea, but that at the present time there seemed to be too many unknowns and possible perils involved in it.

Questioned about the proliferation of visual aids in schools, Mr. Davis said this was an expenditure for which control is entirely in the hands of the local school trustees.

Mr. Davis, when questioned, said the Provincial Government doesn't have a closed mind on the adding of pre-kindergartens to the school system.

The York Mills Progressive Conservative Association provided coffee and doughnuts at the end of the seminar meeting.
