Good For Markham, Stouffville Rail Commuters

morning train and the track from Markham to Stouffville has deteriorated to a standard for freight traffic only in the decade since it was used for passenger trains. A spokesman for the commission said the people who campaigned to save the trains have been given a "use it or lose it" choice.
No date was given in the decision for implementation of the new extended service. The railways had applied to the CTC to drop both services. An application for discontinuance is required if the train is the last passenger service on the line, or if the railway wants a federal subsidy for up to 80 per cent of its losses.
Hearings on the applications, scheduled for a few days last December, stretched to more than two months because of the intensity of public interest in the runs. Both are considered by the railways and the CTC as inter-city services that the 80 per cent subsidy is available — but most of the objections were from people who want the runs as commuter trains into Toronto.

John Brewin, who was attorney for the Transit for Agincourt Committee at the commission hearings, said about the decision: "We're really pleased."
The order to the railways, he said, "is recognition of the fact the area has been underserved by rail commuter services. In fact, the committee made a specific finding that the area was not well served by rail, and this was apparently the basis for the government's decision. 'This decision can form the basis of major progress in the development of commuter services using existing rail lines,' Brewin said.
The Havelock train picks up half its load weekly mornings at Agincourt, at the northeast corner of Metro Toronto, carrying them only the last 12 miles of a 100-mile run. Testimony at the hearings suggested the line could not make money unless at least half its passengers rode 35 or 40 miles or further.
The Markham CNR train, currently known as the One-Way Wonder, also carried half its passengers to Agincourt, a distance of just over 13 miles. At present, its total length is just over 22 miles, and with the extension to Stouffville it will be 28.6 miles, still less than the distance needed to break even if all passengers rode the whole way.
The Toronto-Havelock train stops at Leaside, Agincourt, Locust Hill, Claremont, Dagmar, Myrtle, Burketon, Pontypool, Danvers, Dranoel, Carvan, Peterborough, Indian River and Norwood. The fare from Union Station to Agincourt is 65 cents, to Peterborough $2.95 and to Havelock $3.85.
Fares on the CNR's Markham train are 65 cents from Union Station to Agincourt and $1.15 to Markham. The CTC found that CP Rail lost almost $258,000 on the service to Havelock in 1969, the last year for which complete figures are available, and that the CNR lost just over $64,000 on its train the same year.
The decision says these losses could be reduced by fare increases, although this has limitations. But "one of the feasible alternatives in railway operations practices, equipment assignment, scheduling, pricing, or other aspects of passenger service under railway control would, in our opinion, overcome the inherent unprofitability of these services."

Nevertheless, both services have sufficient public merit to be continued, with the commission undertaking to re-examine the CNR discontinuance application after two-way service has been operating for some time.
Ontario Social and Family Services Minister Thomas Wells, the only member of the provincial cabinet to present his own brief to the CTC hearings concerning the CNR rail service to Stouffville, termed the commission's decision "a great victory for all of us in that area."
Mr. Wells represents Scarborough North, one area through which the CN passenger service operates.
John Medcof, of Mount Albert, a lawyer and a member of a committee called Railroad Boosters, said the commission's decision is almost what he recommended. He said, however, that the Toronto-to-Markham run was no use as a One-Way Wonder and it should be extended beyond Stouffville to Uxbridge.
The 36-page decision says that however inadequate the service on the runs — and it called service both on the trains and at the stations minimal — they are preferable to buses or cars for many people.
Public transit now goes to Agincourt, but it takes 70 minutes to get downtown on a bus and two subways compared with 26 minutes by train.
"In a large city like Toronto, there is no doubt that a passenger train, when the railway is already there, can transport substantial numbers of people faster, and for them just as economically as can automobiles or buses."

"When a passenger train is performing its function there is equally no doubt that the pressure on streets, roads, and expressways is significantly relieved."
The decision notes that the projected population in the Agincourt area is expected to rise from about 30,000 now to about 250,000 by 1985, and that the demand for rail service should be equal to the present demand for GO train service by about 1990.
"Because of this growing demand, the commission says the cost of financing 80 per cent of the deficits accrued by these trains is justified: 'The requirement of the public for continued railway passenger service outweighs the charge on the taxpayer that will result.'"
The railway demand for the CP Rail train is close to Toronto, the decision shows these riders do not pay for it. Traffic from Peterboro and Havelock accounted for less than 30 per cent of the number of passengers but almost 70 per cent of the number of passenger miles.
Nine passengers getting on at Havelock would travel as many passenger miles as 62 getting on at Agincourt.
Transportation services are an important stimulant to growth and "it seems to us that the northeast quadrant of the Toronto region is not as well served for transportation, both by railway and commuter services, as it could be."
Turning to the CN line to

Markham, the decision says the average daily load of 53 — about half the number of seats — is good, "considering its limited scope."
The commission decided in favour of an experiment in expanded service "in the face of all the evidence of the growing need for rail passenger service in the area."
CN is accordingly directed to operate the service at the same time in the late afternoon and at appropriate times in the early morning five days a week between Toronto Union Station and Stouffville, stopping at Agincourt, Milliken, Unionville, and Markham and any other places where sufficient traffic is offered.
The commission considered a proposal that the train operate only as far as the Scarborough GO train station and that passengers use the GO train to Union Station, but dropped this for the time being because it would take too long to introduce.
The railway was instructed to do a feasibility study on the proposal and report to the commission.
In the meantime, the CTC is going to study ways that rail service in the northeast quarter of Toronto can be improved.
The decision rejects complaints at the hearings that the railway was deliberately downgrading the service to drive away passengers, but noted that services provided were a minimum "consistent with the traffic offered and the services incurred."
It said that while the railways rejected the possibility of using local bus lines as feeders "there was no evidence that they had ever tried."

UCW Studies Status Of Women At York Presbyterian Meeting

What is the Royal Commission on the Status of Women all about?
This was the theme under discussion when the United Church Women of York Presbyterian met in Queensville United Church June 1. Currently everyone is interested in the "rights" or "status" of women and who is more interested than woman herself? Have women thought seriously about how this may affect them and their family life? Do they feel they are adequately informed about the many issues open for discussion in the Report of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women?
These and many more questions were raised by the interesting and informative speaker Miss Beatrice Wilson, representative of the United Church of Canada. The Royal Commission was first appointed by the Government of Lester Pearson. From all Canada 469 briefs were presented for study, the United Church being the only church to submit one.

These briefs came from people in business, law, social work, insurance, workmen's compensation, housewives, etc., or from all areas of Canadian life. Miss Wilson pointed out many of the irregularities in the law as it pertains to women.

Under the leadership of Mrs. Spence Urquhart of King City, the ladies present divided into six groups and chose a topic for discussion, which included — unemployment insurance, equal pay — equal work, prison reform — rehabilitation for women, one parent family, abortions, property rights. Needless to say discussion was lively and interesting. Each group reported on the results.

If information is needed on the subject, the report is available from the Queen's Printer, Ottawa, at a cost of $4.50.
In the songs which opened the morning and afternoon sessions, music and words of hymns in the new hymn book were ably introduced by Mrs. Hans Hirsch of Lemonville. Mrs. James Nauta of Lemonville led in the devotional. Some of the thoughts she presented were: "Has our concept of 'freedom' changed in the passing years? Have we expanded freedom to mean that anything goes? Is too much freedom good for us or does it lead to destruction?"
President Mrs. Donald Findlay (King City) of the York Presbyterian UCW, extended

"The Mixed Blessings" Present Concert Saturday Night At 8 PM

It has a beat, it has life, it has a message! That's the only way to describe the music of "The Mixed Blessings," a local Christian folk group.
One Sunday evening in September 1969, a group of musically inclined teenagers gathered with two adults at St. John's Anglican Church, Jefferson. At that time there were three talented guitarists and eight singers. They enjoyed themselves so much that a permanent group was formed known as "The Mixed Blessings."
They made their first public appearance at St. John's and soon were receiving outside invitations. As they moved around, other young people became enthused and asked to join. The group now numbers 16, composed of four guitarists, a drummer and singers. Many of their arrangements are original, in fact, many of their songs have been composed by members of the group.
In the past year alone, they have travelled about 1,000 miles to sing in churches, homes for senior citizens, Day-break House and the Aurora Hospital many times — and at the Hospital for Sick Children, schools and nursing homes, etc. They gave a concert at the Ontario School for the Blind at Brantford, which Kent Butler, the group's bass guitarist attends. They were heard over CFGM at Christmas and appeared at the outdoor service at the Mill Pond during the Winter Carnival.
These young people give freely and joyfully of their time and talent and in so doing have brought a great deal of happiness to others. They are all high school students ranging in age from 14 to 20.
They can be heard in concert on June 12 at 8 pm at St. John's Church, Jefferson. All are welcome to come and enjoy their lively renditions of Christian folk music and instrumentalists. They are a great group of youngsters.
Members of the group are: Billie, Susie and Danny Locke; Heather Gerber; Debbie and Kathy Shiver; Cindy Wilton; Cheryl Marsh; Edie Davidson; Lynda Earl; Diana Turner; Chris Turner, drums; Ron Shiver, rhythm guitar; David (Hop) Wilson, lead guitar; Kent Butler, bass guitar; John Gerber, guitar.
