their price . . . the Chinese saving up their minds. Finally John learned the Canadians effected a contract for $700,000. At the same time a large Canadian tobacco company represented at the trade show, sold a contract in the amount of $400,000. John said this made China Canada's largest exporting nation in tobacco.

Life is like this: While John Graham had travelled on his own throughout the greater part of his trip (the two Australians we mentioned last week teamed up with him at Canton), there were other Canadians in Canton too. One evening, as part of the Chinese itinerary (arranged by the government for all guests), John attended a Red Guard concert. "And although the show was loaded with propaganda," John said, "it was a truly fascinating program for Westerners to view. The ballet was beautiful and skillfully done, as was the Chinese folk-dancing. . . . All in a theatre as large as Toronto's Massey Hall."

During intermission, John turned to look at the jam-packed crowd, and, of all things, saw a former college friend in the audience, Bill Heath of Toronto.

(Note: The reference to Dr. Norman Bethune last week, should of course, have referred to him as a "revered" Canadian).
