King Township Recreation Needs Are Varied

A just-released King Township Recreation survey brought a varied cross-section of opinions from "there is absolutely nothing to do if you don't play hockey or figure skate" to "let the old folks plan their own activities - they aren't stupid just because they are old."

The survey was sent out randomly throughout the various areas of King Township by Recreation Co-ordinator Marion Iliohan via mailing, drop points with programs and door-to-door pick up and delivery.

Total numbers of surveys distributed was 550 and 93 of this total were returned which is roughly 17 percent.

Co-ordinator Iliohan commented that the returns were good "when you consider that this is the first time that the residents of King Township have ever been asked to complete a recreation survey."

Percentage of those people replying to survey as to the population of the three larger centres were: King City, 7 percent of total population: Nobleton, 6 percent; Schomberg, 5.5 percent; rural, one percent.

Assisting Miss Iliohan in evaluation of the survey were Ken Hume who is a recreation leadership student at Humber College doing his field work placement at King.

In his report he broke the results of the survey into various age groups from young couples (21-35) to middle aged couples (33-55) and couples (55 and over).

Young Couples: "They are very interested in recreational programs and facilities that they, and also their children could use. These individuals were enthusiastic and seemed to be interested in assisting to get some of these programs started "Most couples interviewed felt a great need for some sort of youth centre for the teenagers and also programs for mothers with baby-sitting made available at the same location. In regard to recreational facilities, these young couples were interested in seeing a swimming pool and tennis courts in the township."

Middle Aged Couples: "They were interested in recreation for their children more so than for themselves. Some of the programs they wanted to see implemented for their children took the form of social recreation rather than active physical programs as they feel that they have enough of these programs already.

"The parents as well seemed to be interested in social recreation in forms of euchre, bridge, camera, and social clubs. Some of the ladies interviewed showed an interest in creative programs such as ceramics, painting, embroidery and quilting clubs.

"This age group is interested in recreation programs although they might be a little reluctant at first to get involved. Once they got involved they would be a very active group. They might require a little more coaxing and time than the younger Couples:

"This group of individuals interviewed wern't interested in the recreation survey because of a lack of fully understanding what recreation is. They seemed to think of recreation activities as being totally physical. If this group were better informed as to the total concepts of recreation they would be able to appreciate it a lot better. One way of informing this group of people would be through their senior citizens clubs. "On more than one occasion, when interviewing individuals in this age group, the person being interviewed did not want anything to do with the printed survey, but were quite anxious to tell me about the trips they had taken or the hobbies they were interested in . . . it would seem that this age group would be interested in discussion groups, not only with their own age group but with younger people as well." In the evaluation of survey and future recommendations" section of her report Miss Iliohan states:

"People are becoming increasingly aware and are wanting activities whereby they can get out and socialize, and particularly the newcomers to the township."

As a result of the survey Miss Iliohan instituted a gymnastic program in Nobleton and a ladies' fitness and games program in Nobleton and Kettleby. These programs were all in November and December for 10 weeks and "in all the response to these programs were good."

There is also a badminton program in Nobleton which "is strictly recreational for adults and the people who are participating are husbands and wives. Although the program runs for 10 weeks the people with the badminton have requested that it be extended after the 10 weeks."

so as to break even after the costs providing there are a maximum number of people participating. If there are less than 15 after three weeks the program is cancelled. "This way it costs

Miss Iliohan noted that "it is unfortunate that there are not enough adequate facilities available in the township to provide

School facilities are good in most cases but some of them are filled with night school programs or cubs and scouts "so it makes it difficult to find a suitable evening and time."

good places for some activities but "it is too expensive to have a program in a hall and therefore makes the cost of the program too high for most participants and therefore begins to eliminate some people for pro-stating that "program ideas should come from the people in the community and with a certain number of participants in mind but it must be open to all people. I feel that by setting up programs in this manner the people get involved in community program planning and will therefore take a keener interest in their community and become more knowledgeable of what recreation is and can do for them."
