The best of 1974 (Part 2)

In last week's column, 'Rock Talk' began to look back at 1974, analysing what were probably the worst aspects of the year.

Probably the biggest pieces of 'hype' this year were shared by David Bowie and Elton John. The bigger of the two, by far, would have to be Elton John.

With three albums (all million sellers) and six singles (again, all million sellers), Elton has got to be the most successful artist of the year.

His album - 'Goodbye Yellow Brick Road' - took several weeks to reach number one on the national charts throughout the Western world while Elton's next album - 'Caribou' - was number one in the second week after its release.

His latest album - 'Elton John - Greatest Hits' - was number one on the charts (both American and British) in the first week of its release.

As the year passed, the 'hype' on Elton grew larger and larger. And unlike David Bowie, Elton was already a guaranteed seller in the pop market.

Some of the artists who didn't fully live up to the 'hype' were the Monkees (1967-68), Bob Dylan (in the 1970's), though he still persists to be a legend, and David Bowie.

In America, Bowie was becoming an underground cult in 1973. While two of his earlier recordings - 'Hunky Dory' and 'The Rise and Fall of Ziggy Stardust' - were building him into a sort of recording legend, the pro-Bowie mass propaganda, filtering in to music newspapers throughout North America, assured him of attaining additional popularity.

In Canada, Bowie's popularity has also waned, though it can also be said it never really fired in the first place. Because music followers in the Toronto area tend to be somewhat critical, Bowie's antics never caught on to any noticeable extent.

His album - 'Diamond Dogs' - of 1974 seems to be more like an epitaph, than a pessimistic story about the future, for David Bowie.

Lennon and McCartney Some of the more notable comebacks, artistically speaking, to happen in 1974 were, ironically enough, John Lennon and Paul McCartney. As a team in the sixties, they were in a class by themselves. And even longer after the music of the sixties and seventies fades away, the compositions of Lennon and McCartney will live on.

John Lennon, as an individual, has had his ups and downs. While his first album - 'John Lennon POB' - was a tremendous effort, lyrically speaking, each album since then has been a failure.

(Note: His second album - 'Imagine' contained some fine tracks and was his biggest seller, but was nothing in comparison to his first). His album - 'Walls and Bridges' - is one of the better albums of 1974. It had excellent lyrics and contained some fine examples of music.

Paul McCartney has also had a fine album - 'Band On The Run' - in 1974.

After two albums less than adequate to the McCartney name and fame, Paul travelled to Africa to put together this concept album - dealing with the aspirations of a band on the run, trying to get themselves organized.

Sure, it contained some trite compositions, but the stronger ones easily overpowered them. Although it was released 54 weeks ago, it is still in the top 20 - best sellers - charts of Great Britain. It has sold over a half a million copies in Great Britain, which is quite a feat there and done this year by only one other group - Pink Floyd.

As for the other ex-beatles, it can be said Ringo Starr has been very successful (his album sold very well and was actually quite good), while George Harrison, for the most part - other than his Luke-warm tour, remained unheard of.

Mark year's end at St. John's

Wednesday evening, January 22, marked the year-end for St. John's Baptist Church, Richmond Hill. With Rev. Dana Lamb presiding. The various church boards and committees presented their annual reports.

The one-year-old board of management, under chairmanship of Gordon Smith, was considered to have earned a permanent place in the church organization.

An occasion for rejoicing was the retirement of one mortgage, made possible by a most generous gift to the church. Special gifts also provided funds for an exterior lighted sign, new chairs and other items.

York Region UCW learn art of communicating

United Church women of the Region of York learned more about the art of communicating at a meeting of York UCW Presbyterial at York Pines United Church, Kettleby.

Introduced by Dr. Margaret Arkinstall of Newmarket, Nancy Edwards, well-known radio communicator, gave tips on speaking to groups as well as ideas for use of audio visual aids and the media in planning programs.

The theme for the event was "Beginning to grow". Approximately 150 ladies attended and were welcomed by president Jean Rumble. Jean Morley assisted in the opening meditation.

Greetings were extended by Mrs. Grace Burns, president of York Pines UCW, and Rev. Bob McElhinney of St. Paul's in Oak Ridges, chairman of York Presbytery.

Jean Nauta, chairman of the social action committee, urged those present to support a petition on behalf of family life and family service centres. The petition was to be presented to York Regional Council on January 23.

Rev. McElhinney reinforced her appeal, stressing the pressing need of the community services provided by these agencies.

Marion Starr shared many ideas for Bible study methods, emphasizing, "The Bible does not need to be re-written. It needs to be re-read".

A music period, led by Jean Morley, introduced new songs, including "A Shout of Celebration" for use in the United Church's 50th anniversary celebrations this year.

Use of slides and filmstrips presenting the background of the 50th anniversary and ideas for

With the new unified service, the Christian Education committee reported that its work has required and will require considerable adjustment, especially if it is to go ahead with its plans to run a Sunday School bus.

The unified service will be continued for another year and then evaluated. To date, it was reported its four-month existence has stimulated considerably more study and discussion among the adults.

The church has definite plans for a regular choir under the leadership of Mrs. Lona Richardson. New choir gowns have been provided by the women's group, who also were responsible for the effective redecoration of the church parlour.

In addition to the general budget, a mission budget of $1,610 was adopted for 1975. It included a small gift to the Richmond Hill-Thornhill Family Services as well as contributions to the regular objectives sponsored by the Baptist Convention of Ontario and Quebec and to the Bible Society.

The nominating committee brought in a slate of officers so that all committees can begin functioning immediately. The congregation looks forward to a good year in 1975 of strengthening within and of reaching out.

The first activity following the annual meeting was Saturday morning Church Family breakfast served by the women's group under leadership of Mrs. Phyllis Allison. John Parsinen spoke of the Convenant Players and their work among the churches. It was a happy occasion.
