Tenders called for mill pond project

Contract documents have been prepared for remedial work to the Richmond Hill mill pond, the Metro Conservation Authority announced last week.

A tender call has been made.

It was back in the summer of 1971 the conservation authority agreed to undertake the reconstruction of the pond, with Richmond Hill designated as the benefiting municipality. A provincial subsidy of 50 percent up to a maximum of $100,000 is available.

The 1971 estimate of the first phase of the work was $98,000. As the benefiting municipality Richmond Hill will be responsible for 50 percent of the cost.

The pond, focal point of a 20-acre park on Mill Street, was created when the small stream was dammed to provide power for a planing mill. Later it became the source of the first municipal water supply.

In more recent years it has been a popular centre for skating during the winter and fishing during the summer.

Fish died
That all was not well with the pond was evident in the spring of 1970 when hundreds of suckers died from lack of oxygen in the water. This lack was caused by plant growth and nutrients added by storm water drainage which led to recommendations for remedial work by a firm of consulting engineers.

The first phase of reclamation will include removal of plant and deposited material and deepening of the pond, and some filling.

A storm sewer is to carry nutrient-laden storm waters in a bypass of the pond.
