Province's Experience '75 program

Student is spending summer sorting Hill historical collection

Richmond Hill's infant Historical Society has been busy collecting pictures, clippings, of copies documents.

Surprising how quickly they accumulated once a committee, members of the society, and interested citizens became aware of the project and got going on it.

Fortunately Richmond Hill's chief librarian, Patricia Hart, is an avid and experienced historian. She had been through it all before.

The materials were assembled at the main library on Wright Street, and they continue to come in. When the province's

Experience '75

program authorized

the ministry of culture and recreation to hire 155 young people to work in regional or local libraries involved in community programs, the local library jumped at the chance to hire a student.

That is why Barbara Schankula of Queensville, who is going into second year journalism at Ryerson Polytechnical Institute, is spending her summer grubbing through pictures and clippings, sorting and indexing them and scrapbooks. Pretty, pert, and 20, Barbara was not particularly interested in history. Public relations or advertising were more what she had in mind from The Liberal. And although the historical society's focus has been on the Richmond Hill area, Barbara is finding much that also relates to her own home area in northern York Region.

One thing that strikes her is the number of families that settled in the community as early pioneers and are still going strong, unto the fourth and fifth generation.

Speaking of Barbara's work, Mrs. Hart observed, "It is fiddly stuff, but very important.'

She knows whereof she speaks, for she did the same sort of thing herself as a member of North York Historical Society and head of adult services for North York Libraries, the position she held before coming to Richmond Hill. Her work culminated in commission from North York Borough Council to write the History of North York as a Centennial project in 1967. Six scrapbooks are BERTIE, by Tyler Whittle. In this first of two novels based on the life of Edward VII, Tyler Whittle again exhibits the careful adherence to the known facts and the skill in revealing the essential drama of the royal life which made his trilogy on the life of Queen Victoria so popular with readers. (Fiction) T M, DISCOVERING INNER ENERGY AND Weldon, Clerk, Town of OVERCOMING STRESS, by Harold H. Bloomfield. This book explains how anyone can learn to control and harmonize the energies of his mind, body and soul to a degree never before believed possible by those familiar only with Western traditions of thought. Recently compiled scientific and statistical evidence leaves no room for doubt that transcendental meditation releases sufficient psychic power to produce measurable enlargement of anyone's capabilities. (Non-fiction)

> THE GREAT TRAIN ROBBERY, by Michael Crichton. A criminal with the manners of an aristocrat devises a fantastic scheme for robbing two supposedly burglar-proof safes filled with gold bullion which are speeding by rail to the British army in Crimea. The author of THE ANDROMEDA STRAIN and THE TERMINAL MAN has written another story that carries realism and suspense almost beyond the bounds of what is pleasant.

> HEALING-A DOCTOR IN SEARCH OF A MIRACLE, by William A. Nolen, M.D. Dr. Nolen, well known for his best selling THE MAKING OF A SURGEON and A SURGEON'S WORLD, here presents a serious study of faith healing and psychic surgery. His search for the truth took him to a Kathryn Kulhman service, to a meeting with Norbu Chen and to various exotic countries where different medical miracles have been reported. What he found will interest the

A member of a German U-boat crew in World War II has written a revealing and absorbing novel based on his experiences in the most hazardous of all the branches of the German armed forces. He portrays the effects which prolonged tension and crowding had on various members of the crew and pictures with total immediacy the terrible frenzy of attack and defense manoeuvres beneath dark and
