Power skating starts September 2

Bill Woloski has been operating the Richmond Hill Power Skating School for eight years but he gets an awful feeling sometimes.

He feels there are people out there who don't know what power skating is really all about.

"You mention power skating and people often hesitate. Then they come up with a comment that it's something that improves your skating."

That it does, but it's more involved than that.

For example:
4-week program
 One of the first steps in the four week program, which kicks off September 2 at the Richmond Hill Arena, is to teach the individual how to "accelerate properly on his skates, to start off at a slow-motion speed and gradually build it up."

The classes are held Tuesday, and Thursdays.

He is also taught to do "step overs" which, again, enables him to turn quickly and get back into position.

Also on the program are other basic fundamentals of skating such as how to do proper stops, skate backwards, and how to place your weight on the proper foot.

Anticipate plays
 "We also lay heavy emphasis on teaching a player to anticipate plays before they get underway and to develop the ability to take up certain positions to cover different types of line rushes."

All of this is done without benefit of a puck.

"The puck can come later," said Woloski. "Our aim is to develop the player's skating ability, his moves, and so on."

"There's no sense in being a good checker, a hard shooter or anything else if you can't skate well enough to get to the proper position."

Top instructor
 Chief instructor for Woloski is Ted Wiczorek who was a protege of the original instructor, Pat Flannery. Wiczorek is well qualified for the job as he teaches at the Haliburton Hockey Haven.

Woloski said he started the school eight years ago because "I found I was driving too far afield to give my boys the skating instructions they needed. Why not have a school in our own community at rates below the commercial rates of other similar schools."

He added that any "youngster who attends our school will find he has a great advantage over others when it comes to trying out for town representative teams."

Cost to join the school is $20 for eight one hour sessions.

"Ages of the applicants usually range from 7 to 17 years," said Woloski, "but we even have fathers coming out with their sons for exercise. It's also a good way to get in shape."

Application forms are available at Richmond Hill Arena or Alliance Sports or by phoning Mr. Woloski at 884-6315.
