

Artificial controls 'stifle initiative'

By Sinclair Stevens
MP York Simcoe

parliament hill

We Canadians are being conditioned to accept a standard of living less than our capability. It is a subtle conditioning but it is there.

With no real growth in the economy, a per capita income now eighth in the world compared to second six years ago and with the highest combined inflation and unemployment levels since confederation, those in power would like to talk of other things.

If you cannot reach your goals, then change your goals is the new approach.

We are told there is a limit to growth in Canada. The prime minister's control program is designed to whip us into line. Health and Welfare Minister Marc Lalonde advises that we should use more powdered milk to offset the rising price of the fresh stuff.

Agriculture Minister Eugene Whelan adds, "we are eating too much meat and should shift to cheaper spaghetti and macaroni". Our expectations are said to be too high and our natural resources are now found to be finite.

But to live is to grow and as we lower our expectations so will we lower our achievements. Certain resources may be finite but man's ingenuity is infinite.

Canada, with its relatively small population and vast area, is unique in the world. We have the potential to be the wealthiest people on earth if we allow our resources to be harnessed through individual initiative.

To prosper, a nation needs fresh water, food, resources, energy and an educated population. We have them all.

Canada has more lakes than the rest of the world combined and about one third of the world's fresh water supply.

In relation to our population we have more arable farm land, natural resources and energy reserves than any other country. We certainly have a highly talented people.

So why have we slipped?

In my opinion, we have subjected ourselves to undue bureaucratic control. Our growth in employment has been more in the unproductive sectors of the economy than the productive.

Most bureaucrats are quick to regulate, but slow to innovate.

Left to government, our oil fields, gas reserves and potash industry would never have been developed to their present levels.

Yet governments in the name of progress now stifle further advances through heavy taxation and regulation, and there are even plans to nationalize certain of the industries.

The greatest thing government could do is stop expanding and be explicit as to the future for those who wish to innovate and create.

The people of Canada can create a vibrant economy once again but government cannot do it for them. Such an economy will create jobs for Canadians in productive sectors.

What a relief that approach would be compared to the present drift. But the worst may be to come.

Recently I was shown a paper that is now being reviewed by the Liberal caucus in Ottawa. It contemplates the substitution of a new "gross social product" index for the present "gross national product" figures.

In future, it is suggested, we should calculate the contribution of the unemployed in our society, not just the employed. When you visit your neighbor, it is suggested the visit should be recorded in the new scale as a contribution to Canada, and of course when you take a holiday, it will in turn be duly recorded as a plus for the nation.

It is strange what some academic bureaucratic minds will turn to. It is even stranger that they are paid for their efforts out of our taxes.

Hill service limousine approved

Despite the objections of Councillor Mike Burnie, Richmond Hill will soon have a limousine service.

Burnie was the only dissenter when council approved a limousine licensing policy and the issuing of a licence to C.D. Smith's Northern Limousine Service.

"Why do we need these things?" Burnie asked. "Are the mayor and clerk going to be riding in them?"

According to the new policy, a limousine — officially known as a livery cab — must be "dark in color and bearing no advertising or identification signs."

"A livery cab may be hired by appointment only."

It may not pick up passengers at a cab stand on the street and shall not be operated as a taxi cab.

Policy also requires the driver must wear a uniform or "conservative business suit."

The births column in last week's Liberal classified advertisements erroneously listed Mrs. Janet Mabley as a new mother.

The Liberal will verify the source of birth announcements from now on.
