Hill horticulturalists told of herbs, flavors Gardening

RICHMOND HILL — with fresh young dandelion greens and a few other off-beat ingredients.

At their April 27 meeting, members of Richmond Hill Horticultural Society learned a great deal about herbs, their historical, traditional and contemporary culture and uses.

The speaker was Mrs. Charlotte Erikson-Brown of Kettleby, author of 50 Varieties of Herbs, a director of the Herb Society, who grows, shows and judges herbs. She had with her a variety of potted plants and dried herbs for winter, fresh and fragrant, from under a blanket of snow. One does not need a large garden for planting a great variety of herbs, said Mrs. Erikson-Brown. At the end of the normal growing season they can be dried and put in jars for use through the winter, or potted and brought indoors to provide fresh herbs as required.

She told the meeting herbs generally thrive in dry, sandy soil. Having their origin in hot climates they like hot weather, but most will survive Canadian winters and can in many instances be gathered in winter, fresh and fragrant, from under a blanket of snow. One does not need a large garden for planting a great variety of herbs, said Mrs. Erikson-Brown. At the end of the normal growing season they can be dried and put in jars for use through the winter, or potted and brought indoors to provide fresh herbs as required.
