BOOK TALK
by Margaret Carrington
A librarian looks at new Markham Library books

Both of this week's non-fiction titles are magnificent oversized volumes composed almost entirely of superb and unusual photographs.

Life Goes to the Movies, by the Life-Time editors
This is a glamorous photographic study of the half-deliberate, half-accidental methods which generated the uniquely influential Hollywood mystique. The text is perceptive and informative but remains incidental to the spectacular shots of the stars, starlets, stunt men, studios, directors and producers taken by Life magazine's brilliantly talented photographers. (Non-fiction)

The Viking Process, by Norman Hartley
Mr. Hartley, a reporter for the Globe and Mail has written a superior thriller with an exceptionally sophisticated plot. A nest of inflamed terrorists who believe they are destroying a gigantic international business corporation, is actually being coolly, cynically controlled by another immense commercial power acting from secret motives of its own. The hero of the novel, a mild academic who has been tricked into co-operating with the demented plans of the radicals, discovers finally that he is the only person left who has the power to check the Viking Process. (Fiction)

The Brontes, by Brian Wilks
All those who have enjoyed the novels of the Bronte sisters and all those who have been fascinated by their unusual lives — externally so bleak, internally so lavish — will be interested in this oversized, pictorial biography of the three writers. No other researcher has gathered together so many portraits, paintings and photographs of the girls, of other members of the family, and of places, buildings, friends and objects important to their story. The text, which is necessarily shorter than some of the detailed studies which have been published recently, nevertheless is well-written and includes all of the major events in the lives of the unlucky authors and their morbid brother. (Non-fiction)

The Dogs, by Robert Calder
This is a spooky, when-the-animals-take-over tale in the tradition of DuMaurier's, The Birds and Herzog's The Swarm. In Calder's version a lonely college professor, unfairly battered by life, adopts a stray pup for company. Unknown to him, the animal is an experimental strain, laboratory bred to maximize its intelligence and savagery. After an ugly incident in which a child is almost chewed to death, the dog escapes, becomes the leader of a pack of mongrels, and then... (Fiction)
