First area industry in 1856

RICHMOND HILL — Probably the first industry in this area was located just two miles west of the community of Richmond Hill in 1856 when the Patterson Brothers established a plant in which to manufacture farm implements.

A thriving village grew up around the plant.

It was complete with a grist mill, schools, stores and a post office, according to a plaque erected on the south barn at Don Head Farms in 1956.

About 1840 Peter, Alfred and Robert Patterson became interested in manufacturing farm implements, since Alfred had invented a fanning mill. The three brothers came to Western Ontario from their home in New York State to sell this machine to Canadian farmers, Mona Robertson wrote in The Liberal on July 18, 1957.

Ten years later, the brothers decided to settle in Ontario, locating first in London, then at Dundas and finally at Richmond Hill, where they built a small manufacturing plant.

Two years later the Crimean War broke out. Its effect on the wheat market brought in so many orders for farm implements and machinery, the Pattersons realized they would have to acquire or build larger manufacturing premises.

So they moved two miles west to what is now Don Head Farms.

200 workers

The Patterson works employed up to 200 men, many accommodated in company houses designed by Peter.

For the employees who continued to live in Richmond Hill and walked to work, Peter had a two-mile long wooden sidewalk built along what was then nothing more than a wagon trail running through the woods from Yonge Street to Richmond Hill Station on the CNR (now Maple). This is now the four-lane Major Mackenzie Drive.

Workers walked

In winter, it was not an uncommon sight to see 75 men walking along in single file in the ruts left by sleighs and cutters.

They walked by the light of lanterns, since they went to work before it was light and returned home after darkness had fallen.

When a horse-drawn vehicle came along the men would have to step out into the deep, unbroken snow, to let it pass.

Turning out everything the Canadian farmer needed for tilling, seeding and threshing, including reapers, combination mowers, scufflers and plows, the Pattersons established one of the most modern plants in Canada.

It included a blacksmith shop, machine shop, storage warehouse, foundry, office buildings and a lumber yard.

The firm's own trees were cut and processed in its own mill.

Created lake

A 10-acre lake created by a dam provided water power for the sawmill.

A hydraulic ram pumped water into some of the larger houses.
