

Armenian centre denied permit

BUTTONVILLE-Markham lawyer Donald Hindson has persuaded town council not to issue a building permit to the Armenian Benevolent Society for a school in Thornhill.

Hindson appeared on behalf of eight families to argue that the society in fact intends to build a cultural centre which would be detrimental in the proposed location on Bayview Avenue.

He understood the town might face court action to force the issuing of a building permit but suggested it would be a case which would be "successful from the town's point of view."

The Armenians had shown their plans at a ratepayers' meeting and made some changes following a meeting with town councillors Sept. 16. A representative said Mayor Tony Roman had promised them a building permit would be approved Tuesday of last week.

The mayor was out of town last week. After an in-camera session with the town solicitor, acting Mayor Bob Adams told the Armenians they were welcome in the town if they could find another location.

"We have a responsibility to the residents who are already here," he said.

Council referred the problem back to staff.

Hindson said there was one house in particular that would be affected by the centre because the lights in the parking lot were to be left on all night without any screening.

Residents were also concerned about noise, traffic and left turns off Bayview at a point which had not been designed for turns.

A school is an approved use in a residential area under the town zoning bylaw, but a cultural centre is not.

Hindson said plans seen by area residents showed that only 22 percent of the total building floor area was devoted to classrooms.

Noise definition altered

RICHMOND HILL — Offensive noisemakers need not fear violating town bylaws, providing their noise is judged necessary.

That's the effect of a recent amendment to Richmond Hill's noise bylaw, which changes the definition of illegal noise from "obnoxious" to "unnecessary."

"It's just a technical matter," explains Town Clerk David Weldon, "mainly to cover construction projects, sewers, that kind of thing."

"A noise might be obnoxious, but if it is necessary work it won't be considered illegal."
