

Single agency needed

RICHMOND HILL — Promotion of employment for the handicapped in York Region should be funnelled through one organization that oversees placements, collects data and responds to emergencies, the Report on Special Placement in the region recommended last week.

The report recommends that COSPRY (Committee of Special Placement for the Region of York), an eight-member organization representing 20 social service agencies, act as a nucleus to improve the services supplied by the group.

The 12-week study was carried out by two Toronto research consultants and was financed by a $9,000 grant through the Manpower and Immigration Outreach program.

Accepting a broad definition to include physical, mental and social handicaps, the report specifically addresses itself to such problems as transportation, information gathering and training for those who require special placement.

The report notes that risks on the part of the employers is the "single most visible obstacle to special placement".

The report also says the importance of issue of transportation in the region cannot be overstated.

"A pressing need has surfaced in discussion with all clients, agencies, employers and interested citizens", the researchers note.

Specific recommendations included in the report are that COSPRY:

- establish an information gathering system.
- with regional government, examine the need for transportation facilities in the region.
- take steps to design effective mechanisms to identify and record information.
- undertake to formally collect, synthesize and disseminate information on all agencies involved in various stages of special placement.
