

Catching people on film

RICHMOND HILL -Catching people on film under natural circumstances as opposed to the clothesline-type shot with a group of people staring stiffly at the camera was the theme of the last meeting of the York Region camera club.

Barry Dursley, a freelancer and staff photographer for Imperial Oil, said children are the easiest to photograph, and are much less camera shy than teenagers or adults.

But the trick, he said, is to engineer informal photos in natural light of people concentrating on something other than the camera. He stated that does much more to capture the many moods and expressions of a person than a formally posed portrait, Dursley showed a number of short programs he had on people engrossed in such things as the wonders of Ontario Place and the Santa Claus parade.
